Then his family came to England from America.

He had a wife called Lucretia, three sons and a daughter. The eldest son, Washington, was almost twenty years old. His two young brothers were twins. They were twelve. The daughter, Virginia, was sixteen years old. She had large blue eyes and a lovely face.

In the old castle, which once belonged to Simon de Canterville, who killed his wife, the modern family moves in. The Ghost still lives here, so he tries to scare all the family members, leaving blood stains, making scary sounds.

Then the Ghost decides to appear, but this does not scare the family members, the father offers oil to lubricate the creaking chains, and the kids throw pillows at the Ghost at all, arranging periodic ambushes for him. The eldest daughter of Otis learns that the Ghost will find peace if an innocent young creature prays for him. The Ghost is very sick, he is offended, sad, so Virginia decides to help him. The girl disappears without a trace, the whole family goes in search of her, on returning home at night she returns to them with a jewelry box. The family undertakes to bury the remains of sir Simon de Canterville in consecrated ground. Will he find his peace there?
