Presentation

THE UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH

Edinburgh University, founded in 1583, is an internationally renowned educational and research center. The university is on the UNESCO World Heritage List - many of the Old Town buildings belong to the University or are associated with it anyway.

In 1582, King James VI signed the Royal Charter on the foundation of the university, which was quite unusual - at that time most universities were founded by papal bulls. Even more unusual is the University of Edinburgh is that its funds for its foundation were allocated from the city budget. It can be argued that Edinburgh University became the first secular university.

Currently, the university is popular with applicants who have already decided where to study: every year it takes over forty thousand applications for admission. Despite the high payment, only one entrant from 12 applicants can become a student of a Scottish high school. This attractiveness is based on the confidence of graduates in obtaining high-quality higher education and further career growth.

THE UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH

University structure Currently, the University of Edinburgh consists of three colleges, which, in turn, are divided into many faculties. All directions have a modern laboratory base and apply advanced methods of teaching students, which is famous for Edinburgh University. The university campus occupies a large number of historical buildings located in the Old Town and having a historical heritage. Mostly there are faculties that do not require significant equipment for laboratory research, such as humanitarian, sociological, etc. New university buildings are built in blocks that do not have historical status and allow the construction of modern buildings and equip them with the most advanced scientific devices.
