

Private school in UK

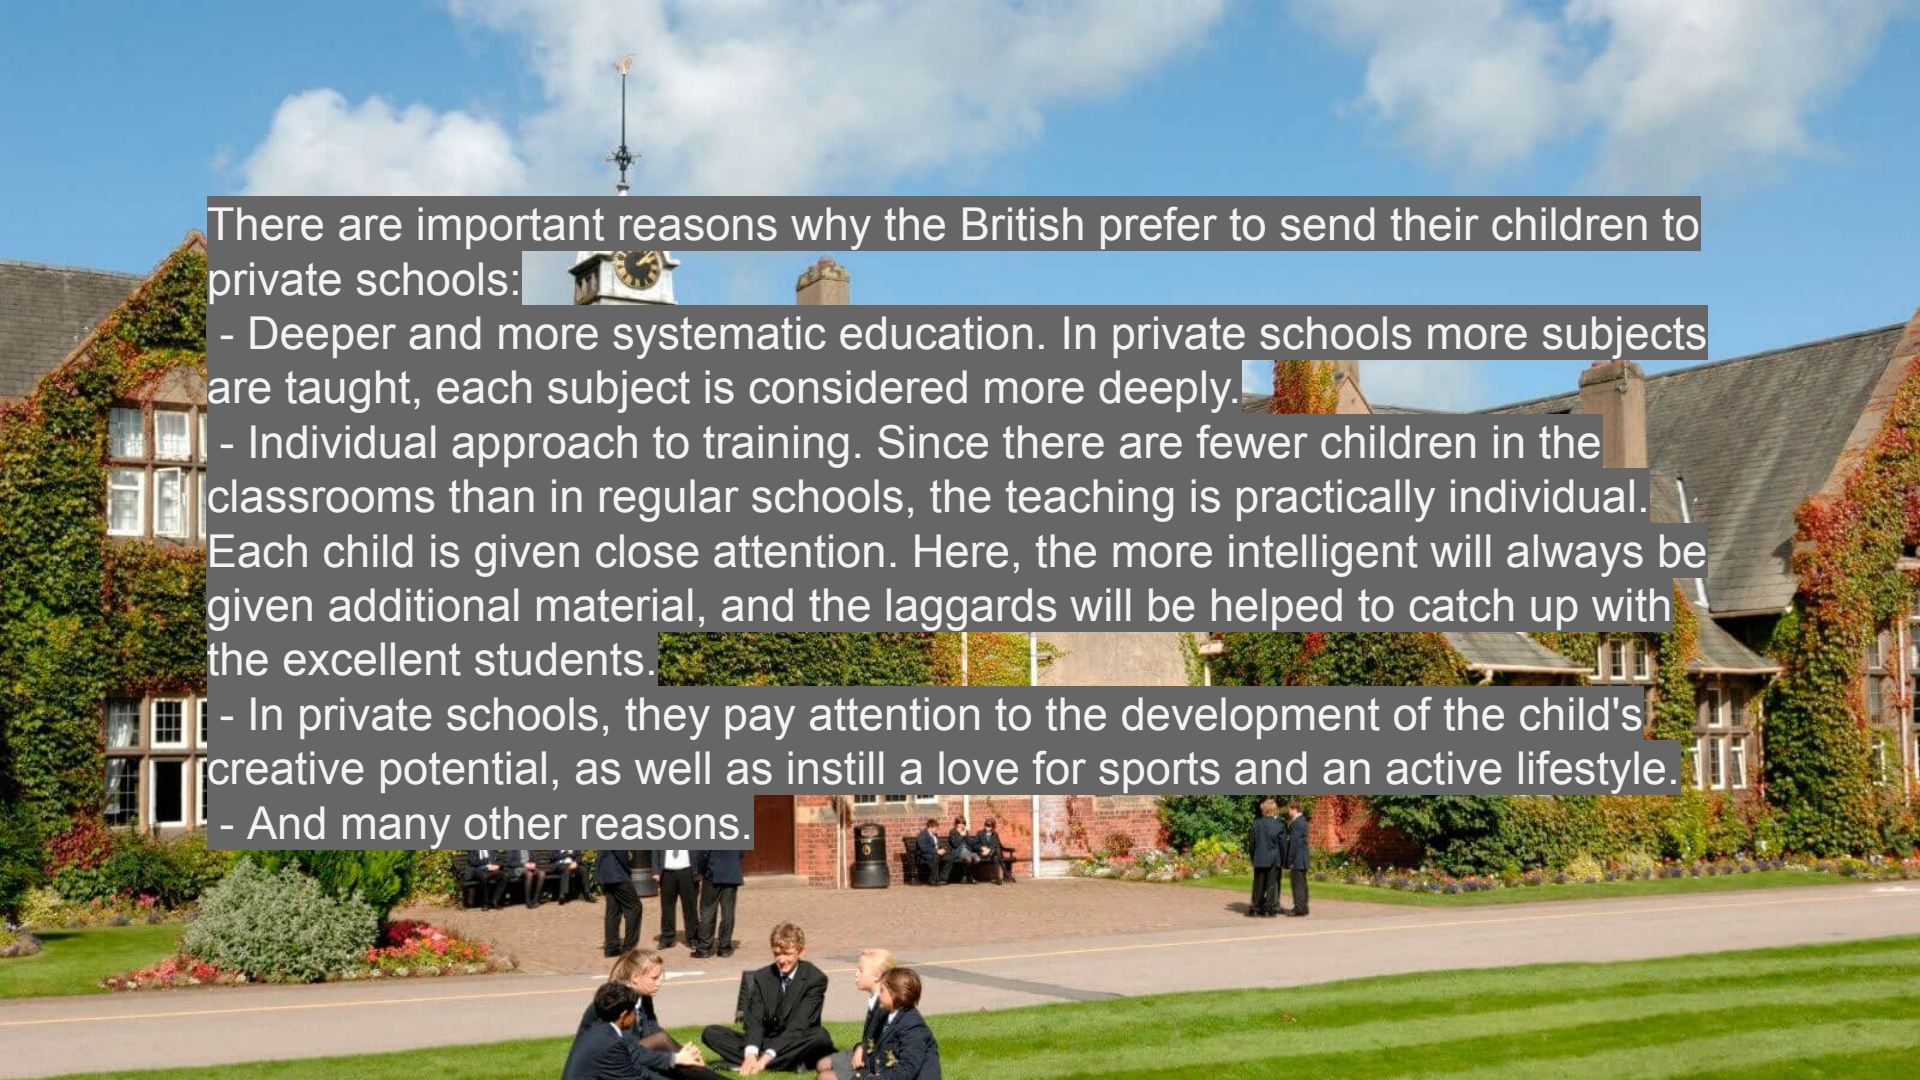

Private education in the UK has a long history. Back in the 17th century, it was considered the norm for girls to receive a private home education. In the future, English society came to the idea that for children it will be more beneficial in socialization and collective learning.

Today, education in private schools in England is considered very prestigious and popular. It certainly ceased to have a strong religious connotation, but it did not cease to exist under the tutelage of the Catholic Church. Most private schools are based at temples.

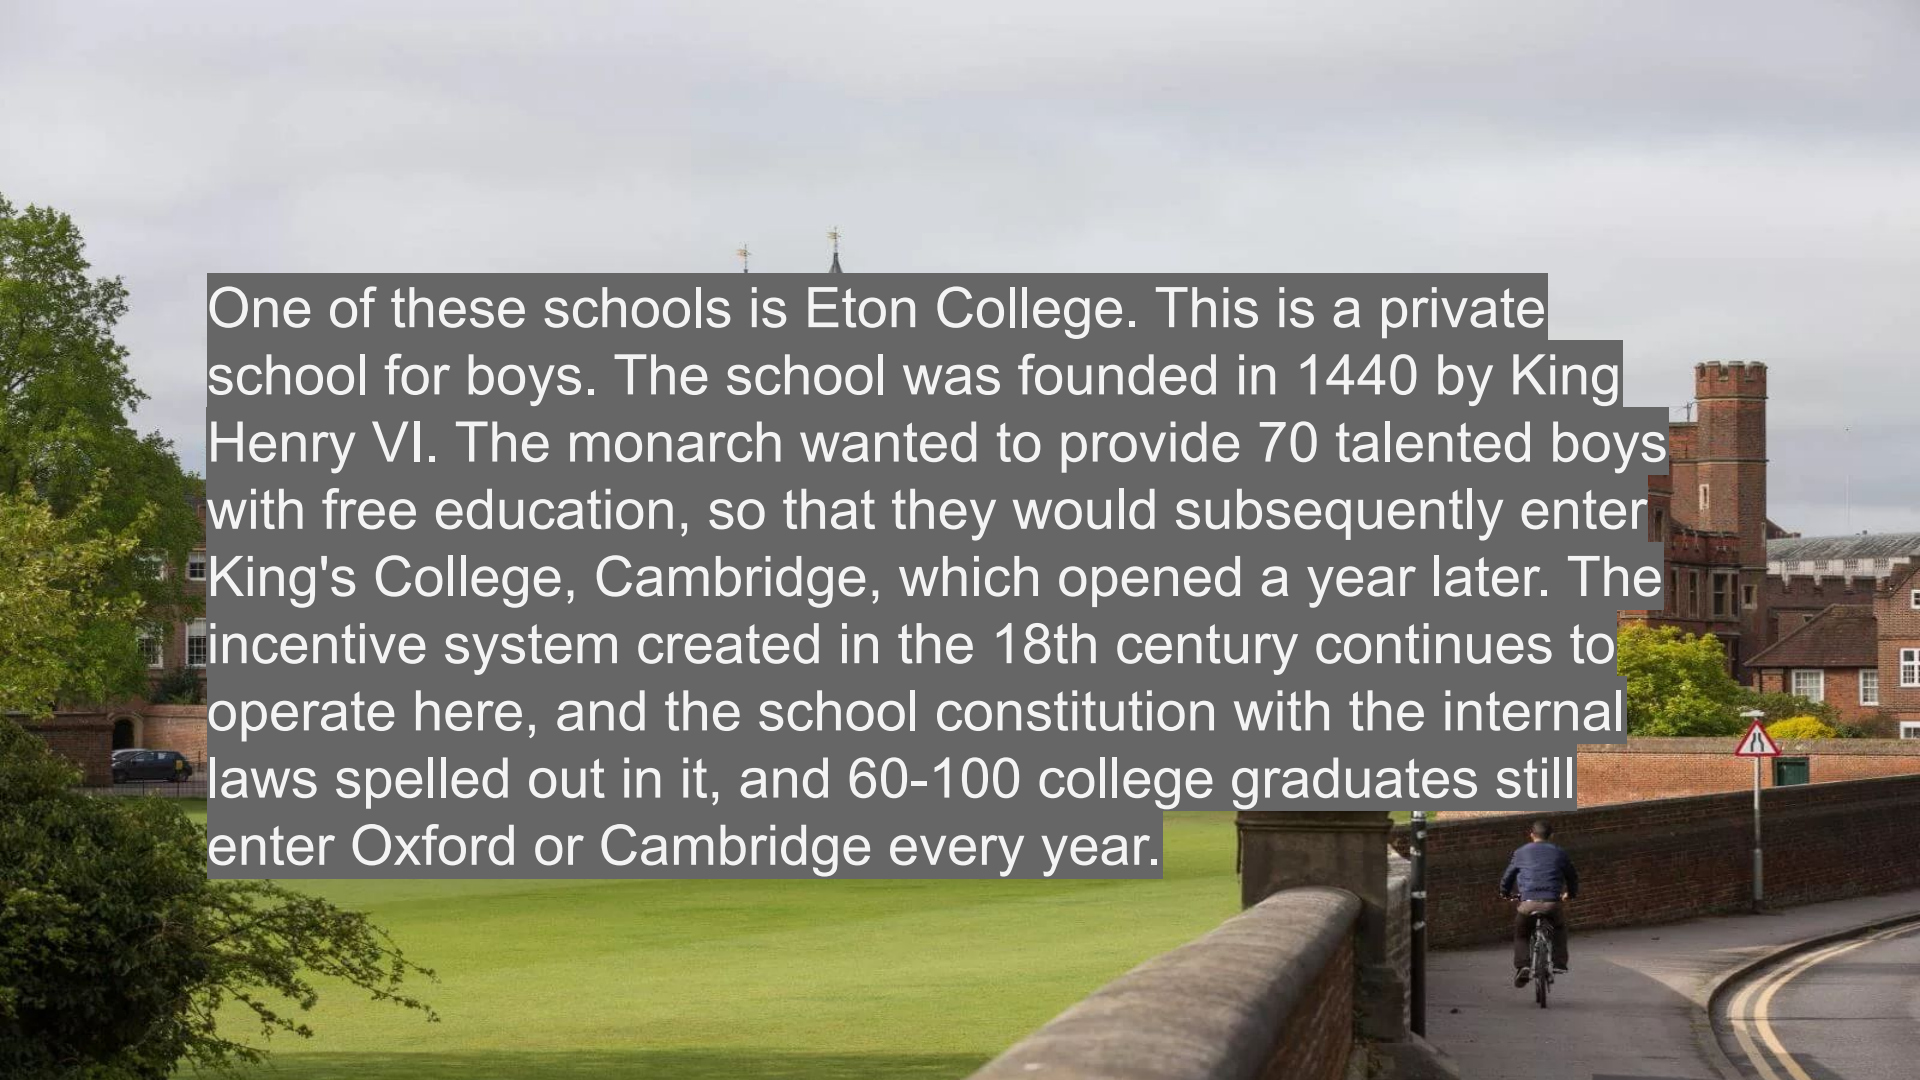

There are important reasons why the British prefer to send their children to private schools:

- Deeper and more systematic education. In private schools more subjects are taught, each subject is considered more deeply.

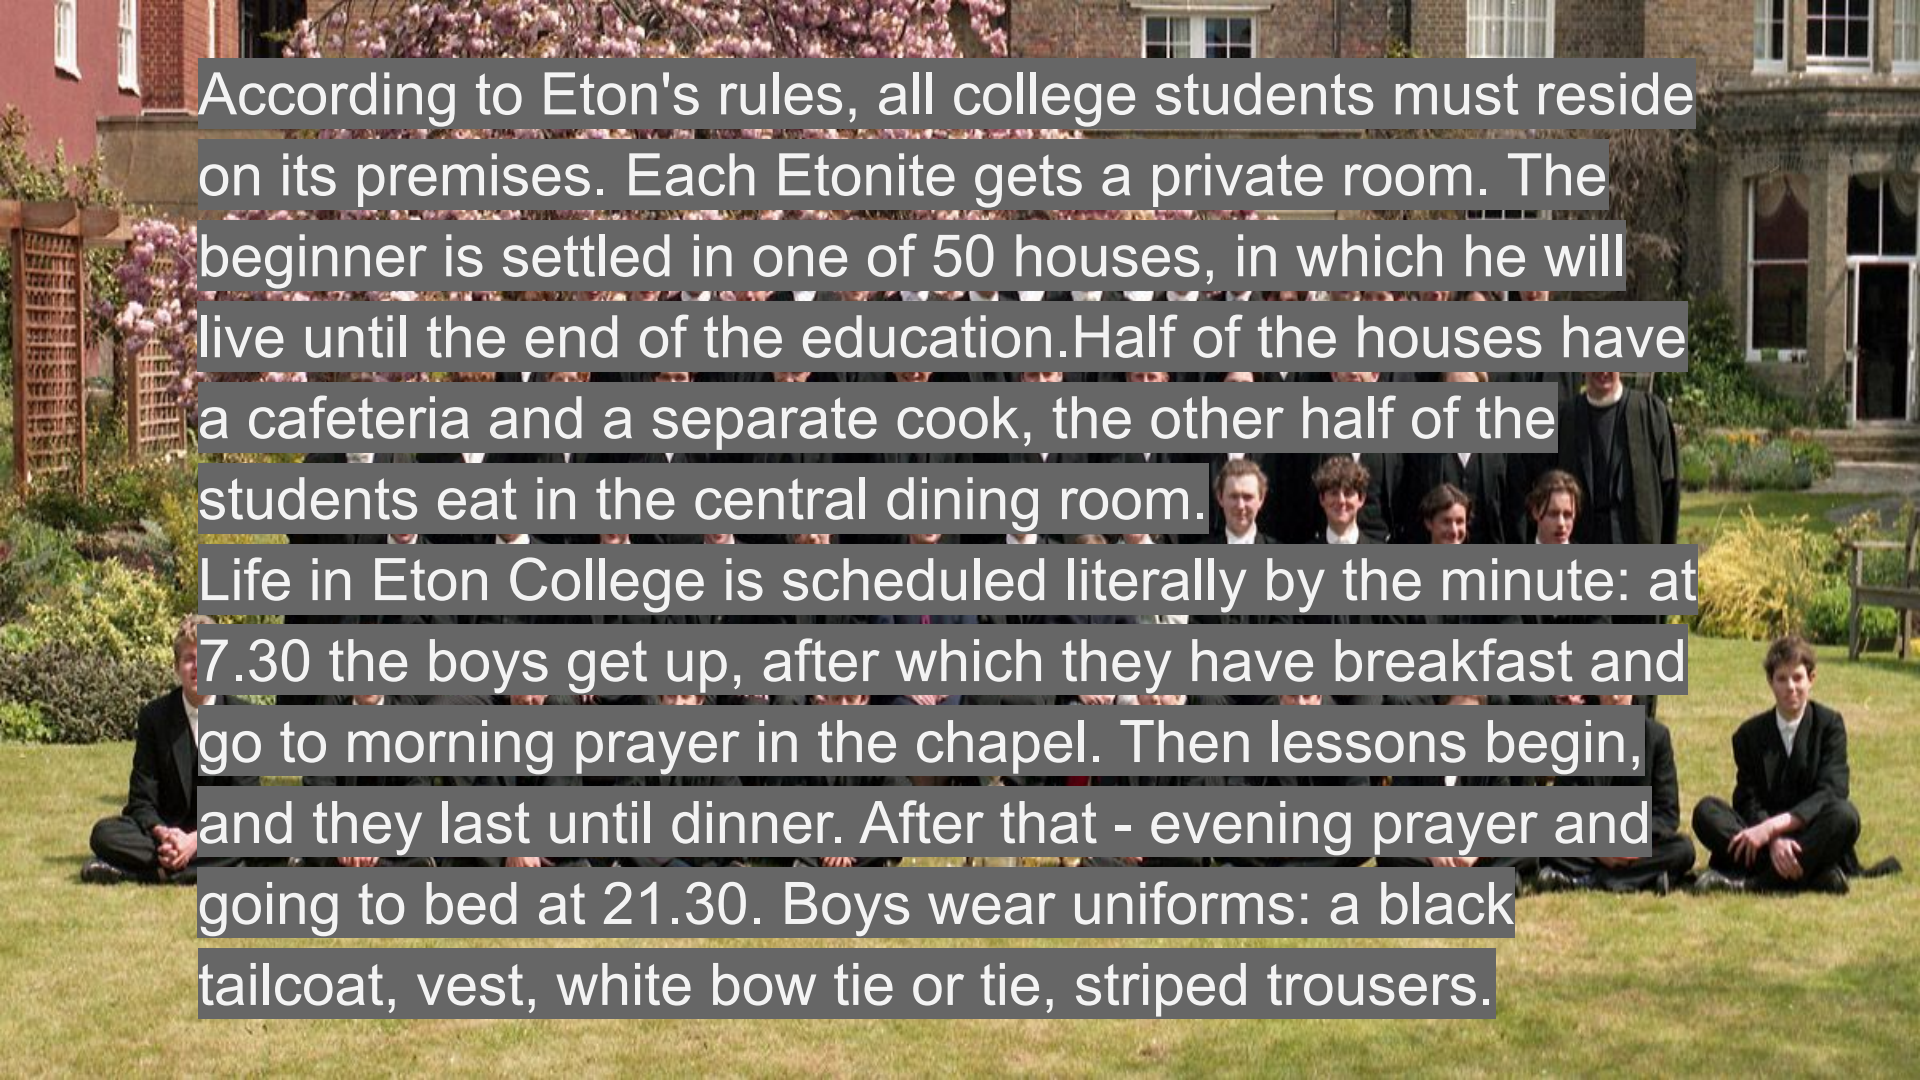

- Individual approach to training. Since there are fewer children in the classrooms than in regular schools, the teaching is practically individual. Each child is given close attention. Here, the more intelligent will always be given additional material, and the laggards will be helped to catch up with the excellent students.

- In private schools, they pay attention to the development of the child's creative potential, as well as instill a love for sports and an active lifestyle.

- And many other reasons.

The background image shows a wide, green lawn in the foreground. A stone balustrade runs across the bottom of the frame. To the right, a paved path curves, with a person riding a bicycle away from the camera. In the distance, there are brick buildings, including a prominent tower with a crenellated top. The sky is overcast and grey.

One of these schools is Eton College. This is a private school for boys. The school was founded in 1440 by King Henry VI. The monarch wanted to provide 70 talented boys with free education, so that they would subsequently enter King's College, Cambridge, which opened a year later. The incentive system created in the 18th century continues to operate here, and the school constitution with the internal laws spelled out in it, and 60-100 college graduates still enter Oxford or Cambridge every year.

A group of Eton College students in black uniforms are sitting on a green lawn in front of a large, multi-story brick building. Some students are standing in the back row, while others are sitting on the grass in the front. Pink blossoms are visible on the left side of the image. The text is overlaid on the image in white font on a dark grey background.

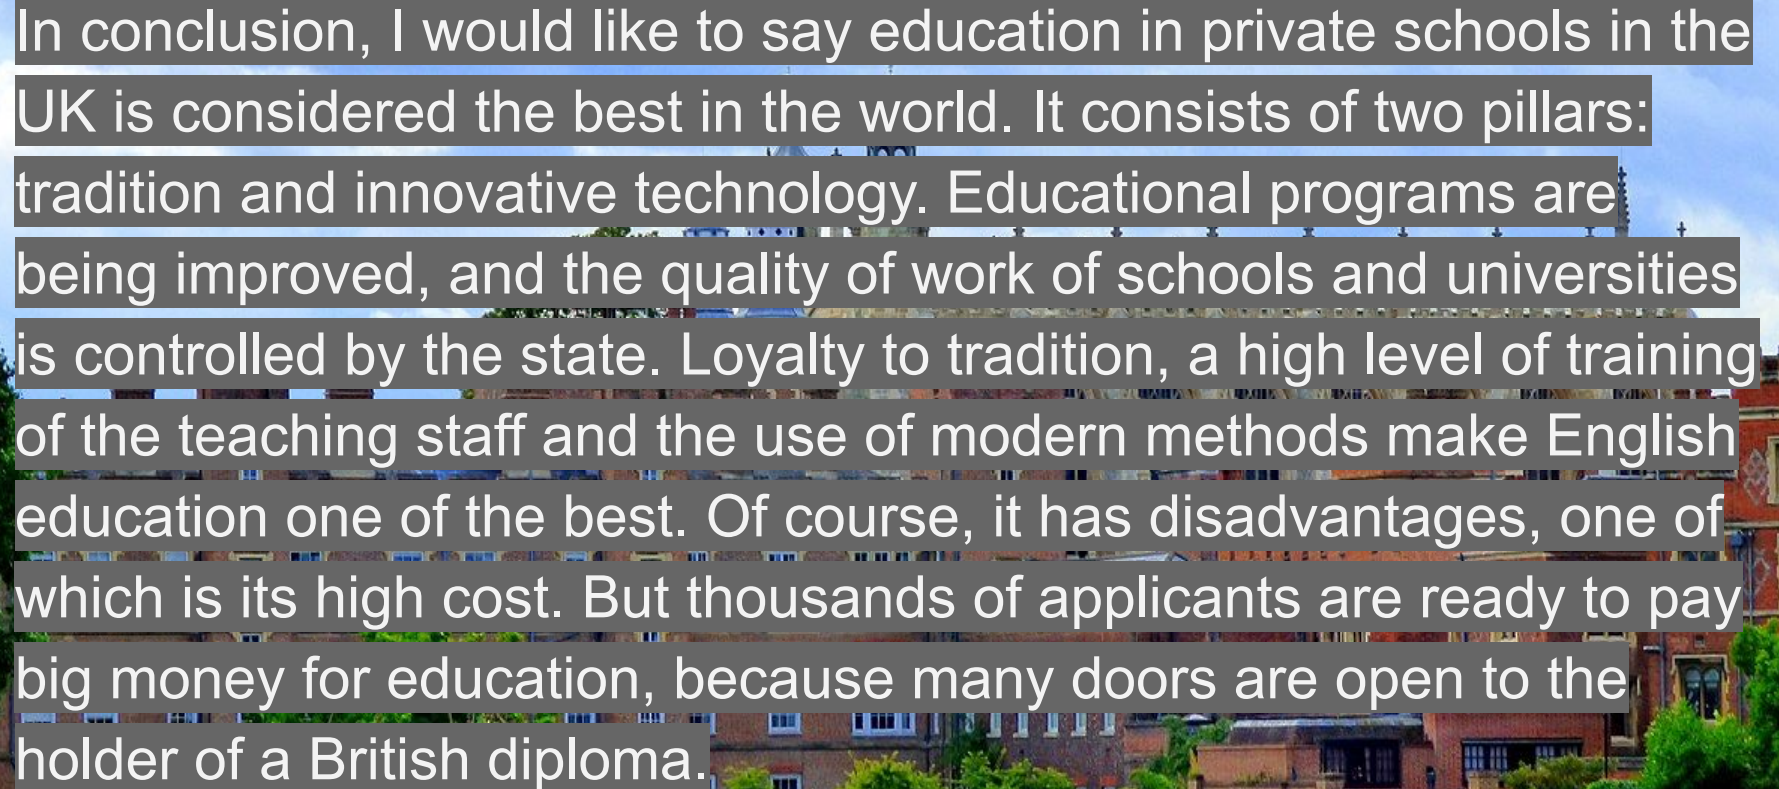

According to Eton's rules, all college students must reside on its premises. Each Etonite gets a private room. The beginner is settled in one of 50 houses, in which he will live until the end of the education. Half of the houses have a cafeteria and a separate cook, the other half of the students eat in the central dining room.

Life in Eton College is scheduled literally by the minute: at 7.30 the boys get up, after which they have breakfast and go to morning prayer in the chapel. Then lessons begin, and they last until dinner. After that - evening prayer and going to bed at 21.30. Boys wear uniforms: a black tailcoat, vest, white bow tie or tie, striped trousers.

19 British Prime Ministers, Princes William and Harry, writers Aldous Huxley, George Orwell, Ian Fleming graduated from this school.

The cost of such education costs 12,910 pounds per term.

The background of the image shows a university campus. In the foreground, there is a paved area and some greenery. In the middle ground, there are several red brick buildings with white window frames and doorways. Some buildings have decorative elements like diamond patterns on the walls. There are trees and bushes scattered throughout the scene. The sky is blue with some light clouds.

In conclusion, I would like to say education in private schools in the UK is considered the best in the world. It consists of two pillars: tradition and innovative technology. Educational programs are being improved, and the quality of work of schools and universities is controlled by the state. Loyalty to tradition, a high level of training of the teaching staff and the use of modern methods make English education one of the best. Of course, it has disadvantages, one of which is its high cost. But thousands of applicants are ready to pay big money for education, because many doors are open to the holder of a British diploma.

An aerial photograph of a university campus. In the center, a large, ornate Gothic cathedral with a white roof and many windows is prominent. To its right, a building with a large white dome is visible. The campus is surrounded by green lawns, trees, and other brick buildings. A road with several cars is in the foreground. The background shows a town and rolling hills under a clear sky.

Thanks for attention!