The US flag

The US Flag Now the US flag has 13 white and red stripes. They show the number of first colonies. Also it has 50 stars on the blue background. It means – 50 states.

Fifty states of the USA

Gradually on the Atlantic coast there were 13 colonies with the population of 2.5 million people.

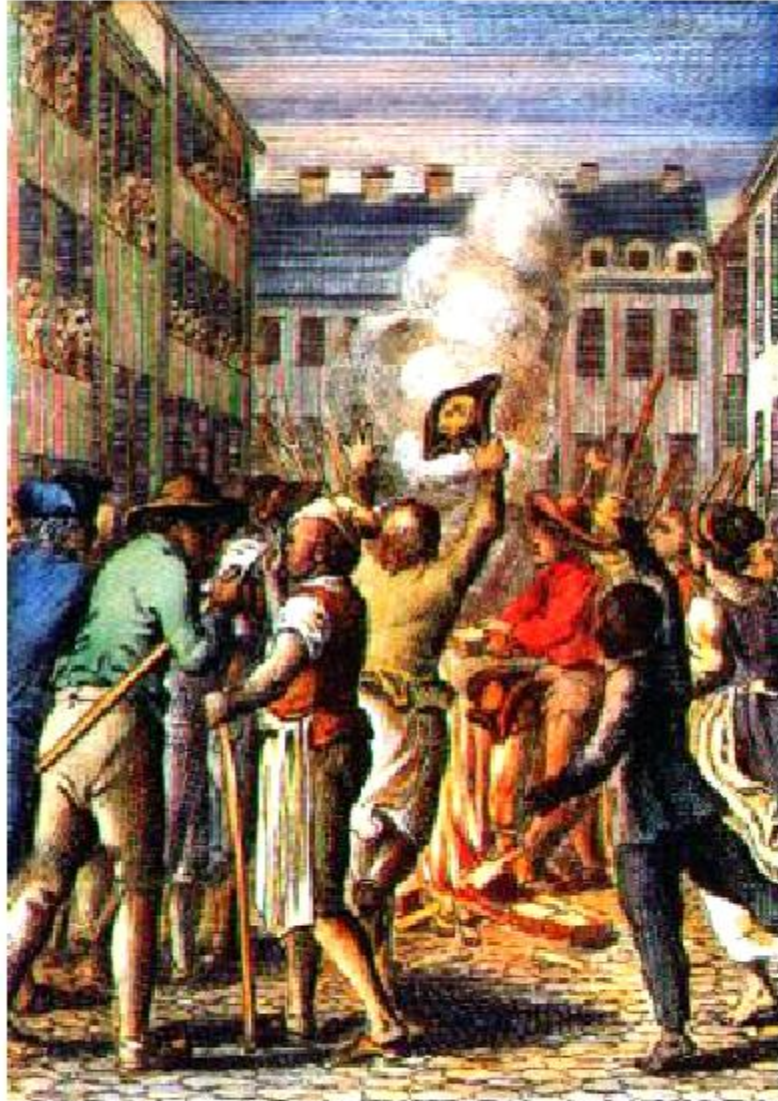

King George III.

The colonies were governed from England by the King George III. The governors of most of the colonies were appointed by The King himself.

King of England wanted to increase profits thanks to possession of the colonies.

Valuable Raw materials (fur, cotton, gold) were taken out and manufactured goods were imported by him.

The colonists were against the king George III and his taxes. They wanted to have independence from England. The war for independence began.

The Colonists at the beginning of the war were poorly armed and badly dressed, they didn't have enough ammunition. Many of them did not want to serve in the army. During the war, the colony's population was divided into two camps: patriots and loyalists, who were vitally connected with the interests of the British Crown."

In 1774 Continental Congress met in Philadelphia, It proclaimed the natural rights of the colonists to \"life, liberty and property.\""

George Washington

In May 1775 the Second Continental Congress was no longer colonial, but the U.S. government.

The turn of the events pushed members of the Congress to take decisive action - to form the army.

George Washington, large Virginia plantation owner and an experienced warrior, became the head of the U.S. forces.

Declaration of Independence

Томас Джефферсон.

On the 4th of July in 1776
Declaration of Independence, composed by a lawyer Thomas
Jefferson, was presented.

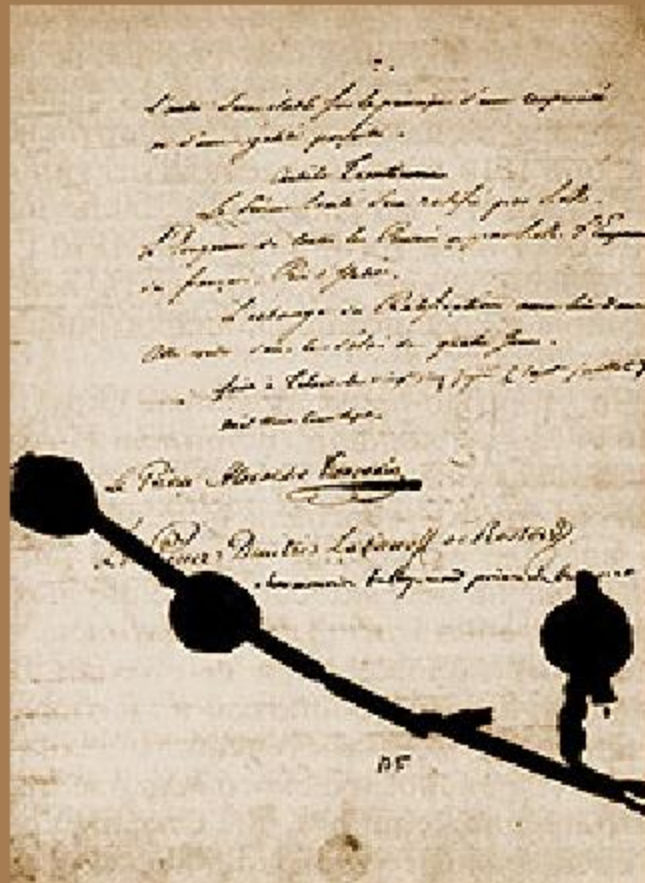

The establishment of a new state
- the United States of America was proclaimed.

There were 13 states in it in 1776

Europe (France, Spain and the Netherlands) accepted the recognition of the United States.

A peace treaty

In 1783 a peace treaty was signed, under which Britain recognized the formation of the United States.

In 1787, the U.S. Constitution was adopted.
