

CHARLES SPENCER (CHARLIE) CHAPLIN

1889-1977

Charles Chaplin became famous during the era of silent cinema, when he created the image of the intellectual-stroller Charlie, a shy, thievish little man who bravely opposed the injustice. And even when in 1927 people began to make sound films, Chaplin remained faithful to his former silent image for another decade.

During his life he performed 80 roles and became famous throughout the world as a comedian, but he was also a screenwriter, director, producer and even composer of his own films. Such as "The Kid", "A Woman of Paris", "The Gold Rush" and others.

And only in 1940
Chaplin created a completely sound
film "The Great Dictator".

In 1952, Chaplin
went to London for the premiere of his movie "The Lights of the Ramp", but he was not allowed back to the States. He settled in Switzerland where he spent the last years
of his life.
