Biography

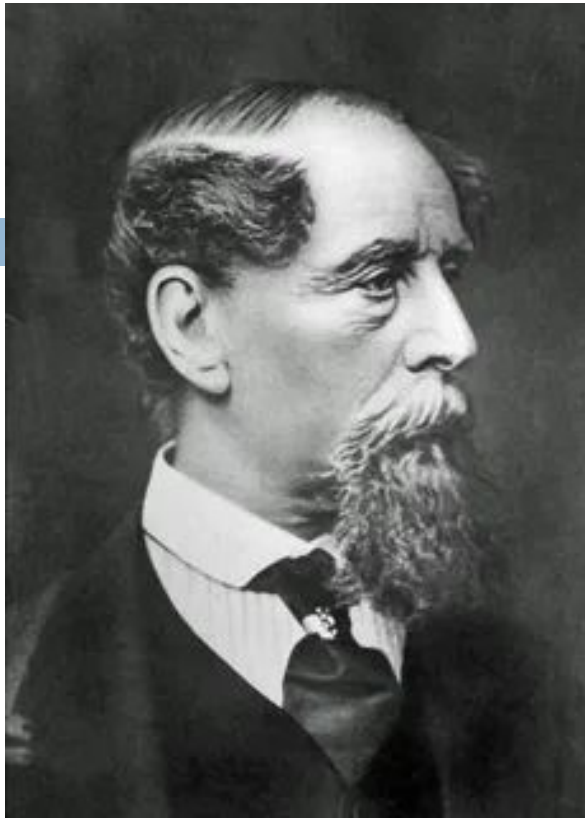

Born: 7 February 1812, Portsmouth, England

Died: 9 June 1870, Kyme, England

Charles Dickens is an English writer. He is the author of novels and essays. He became famous during his lifetime and was named the largest prose writer of the 19th century.

He was the best at describing family values and home comfort. However, this was present only on paper, he was able to compose fantasies that adorned human life. He himself had grown up in abject poverty and endless debt, into which their family had been driven by their father.

Charles became very popular in his time, but never really happy. He searched everywhere for his ideal, spending many years of his life on it. His works were included in the classics of world literature.

In 1836, Dickens published his first works under the title «Sketches of Boz». Their topic was very relevant not only for the reporter himself , but also for the majority of residents of the British capital. Everything that Charles Dickens wrote was always popular with readers, whether it was a story, a novel. He wrote a lot and productively, books were published with a small interval in time.

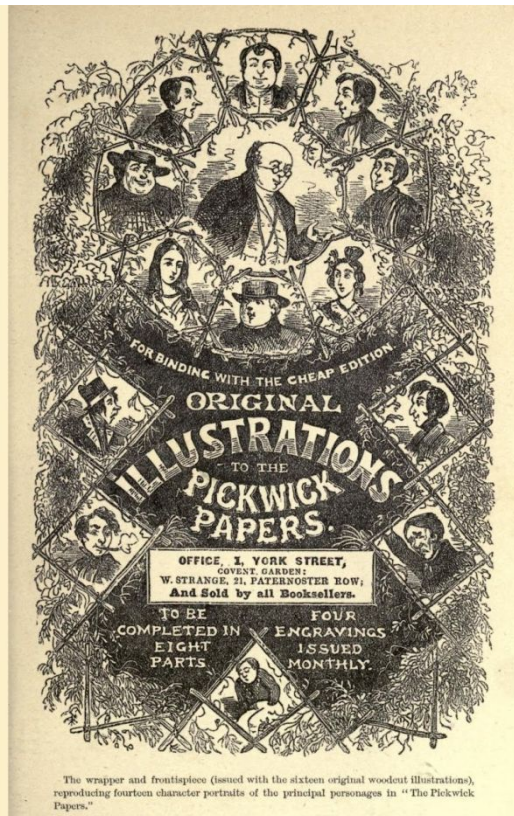

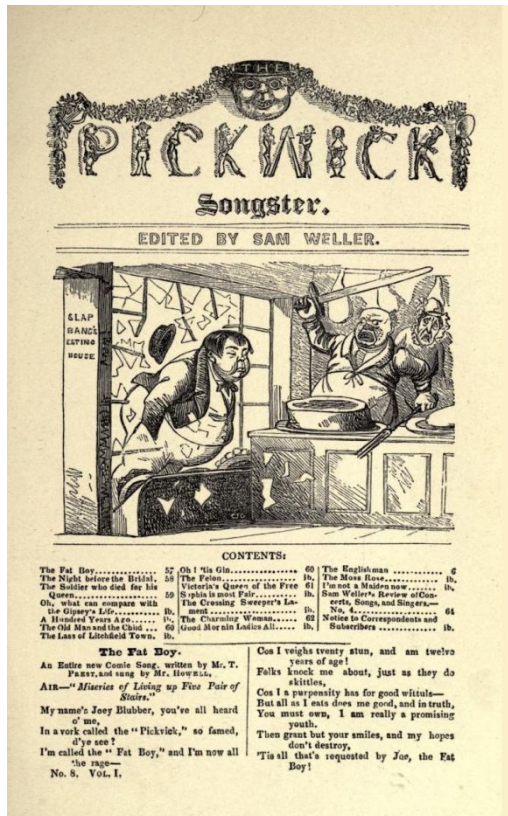

Best works

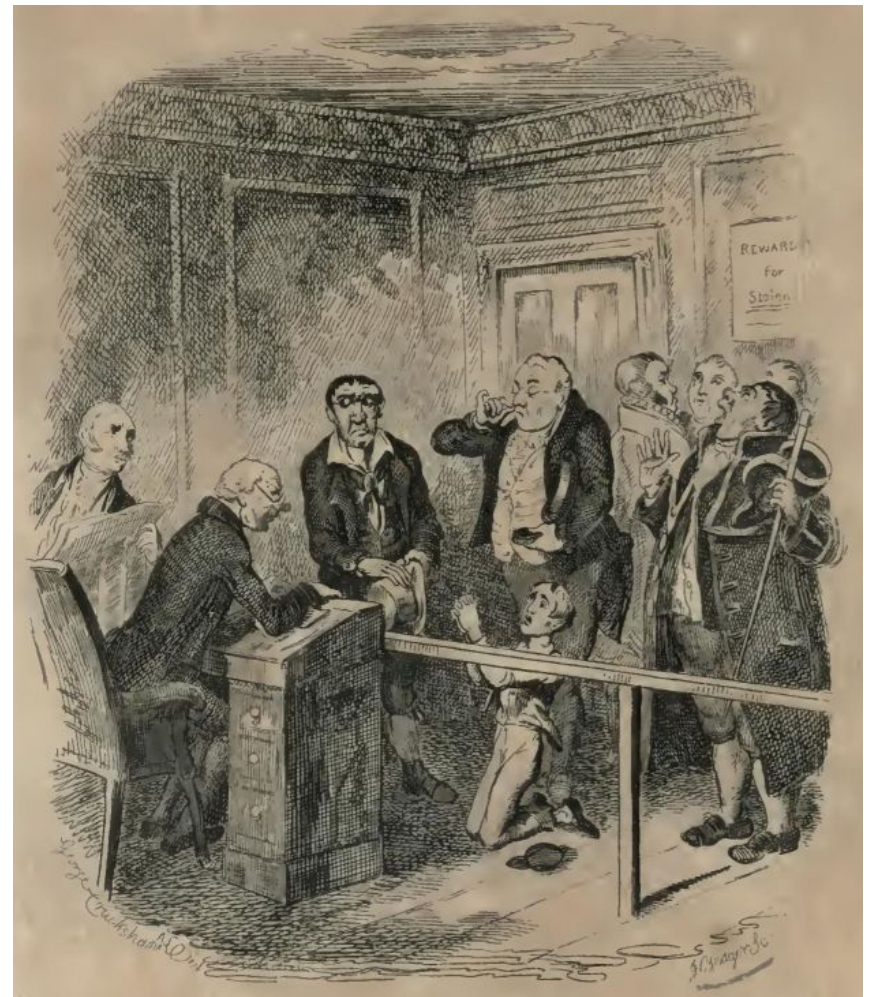

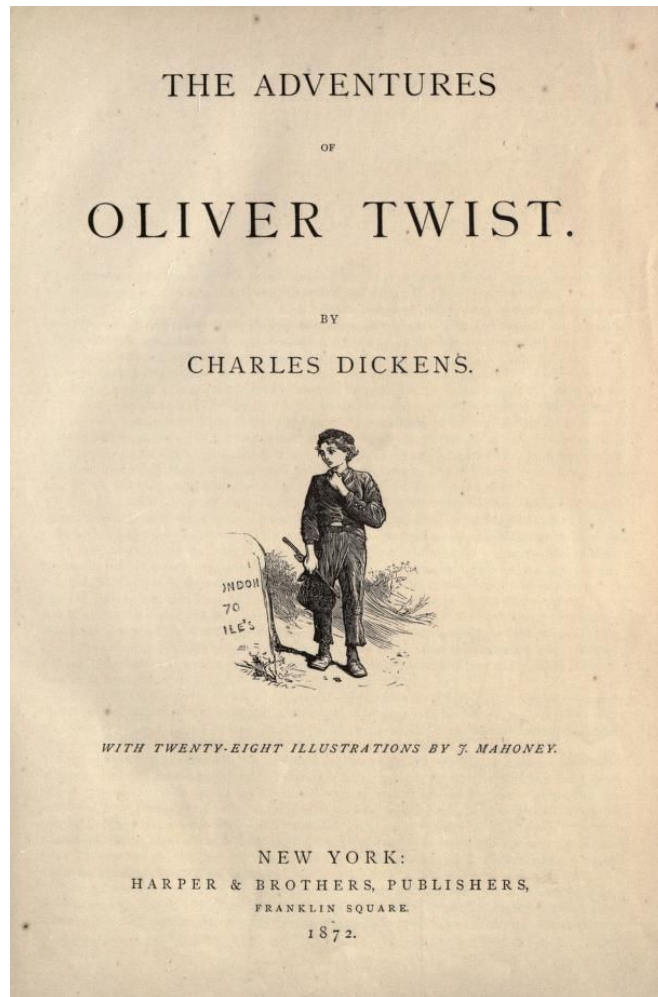

«Pickwick Papers»

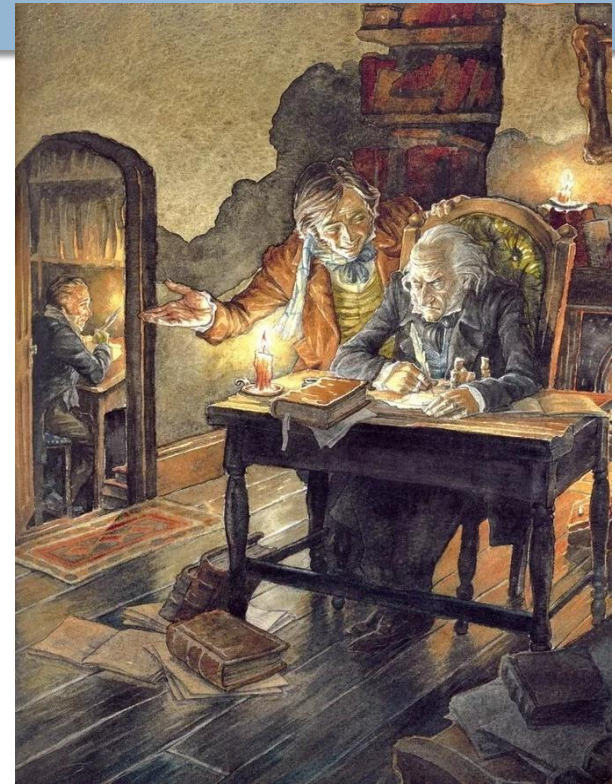

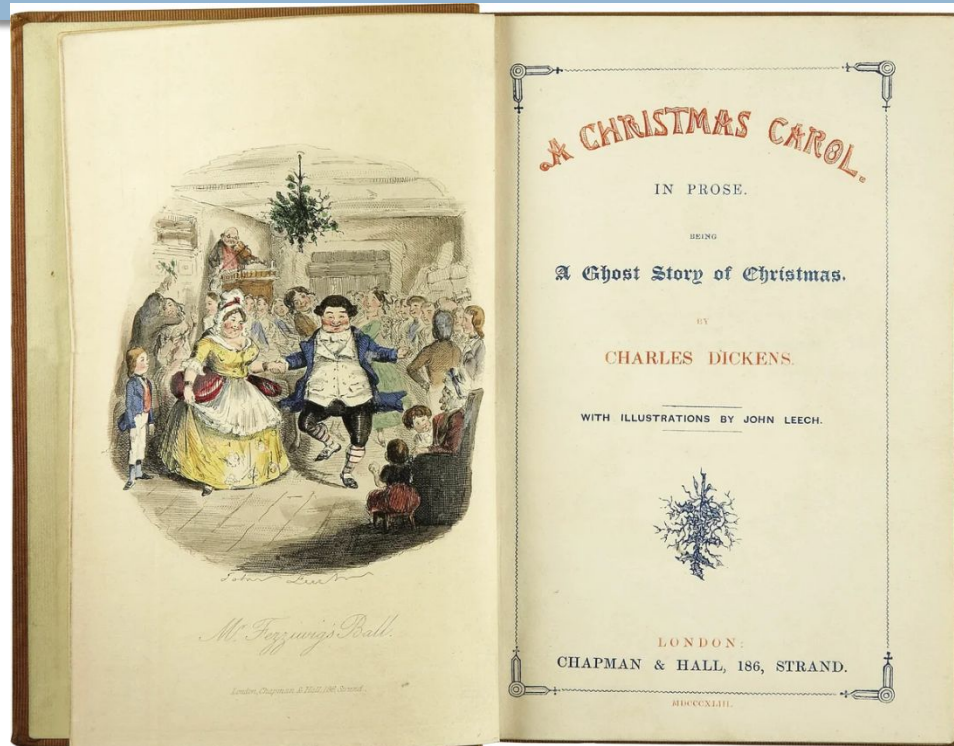

- this is the first novel by Charles Dickens.

«The adventures of Oliver Twist» - is Dickens ' most famous novel.

"Christmas stories". In these stories, the main characters are fairies, elves, ghosts, and spirits of the dead... ordinary Englishmen. In them, the fairy tale is intertwined with reality, and the horrors of the other world are not inferior to the cruelty of the surrounding reality. Magic, scary and moderately moral and educational reading for all times .

Death

After returning from a literary tour that Dickens made in the cities of America, the health of the writer was seriously shaken. In 1869, his arms and legs often failed. On June 8, 1870, he had a stroke from which he did not recover. The great novelist died the next morning. During his entire life, the author wrote 135 works.
