Job Interview Preparations

What's the best way to pass job interviews?

How to Answer Tough Common Interview Questions?

What is your strength?

This is a question commonly asked in most interviews. You need to speak of your best quality or ability. Make sure you select a quality that is useful in the field you have chosen. For instance, if you are appearing for a job in programming, boasting about your creativity is not going to help you. You also need to ensure that you select a strength that does not alter with time.

Why did you choose this field?

The interviewers actually wish to hear what qualifies you for the field you have chosen. When they ask you this question, you need to explain to them your special inclination for the field you have selected. You need to enumerate your skills and abilities that make you ideal for the field.

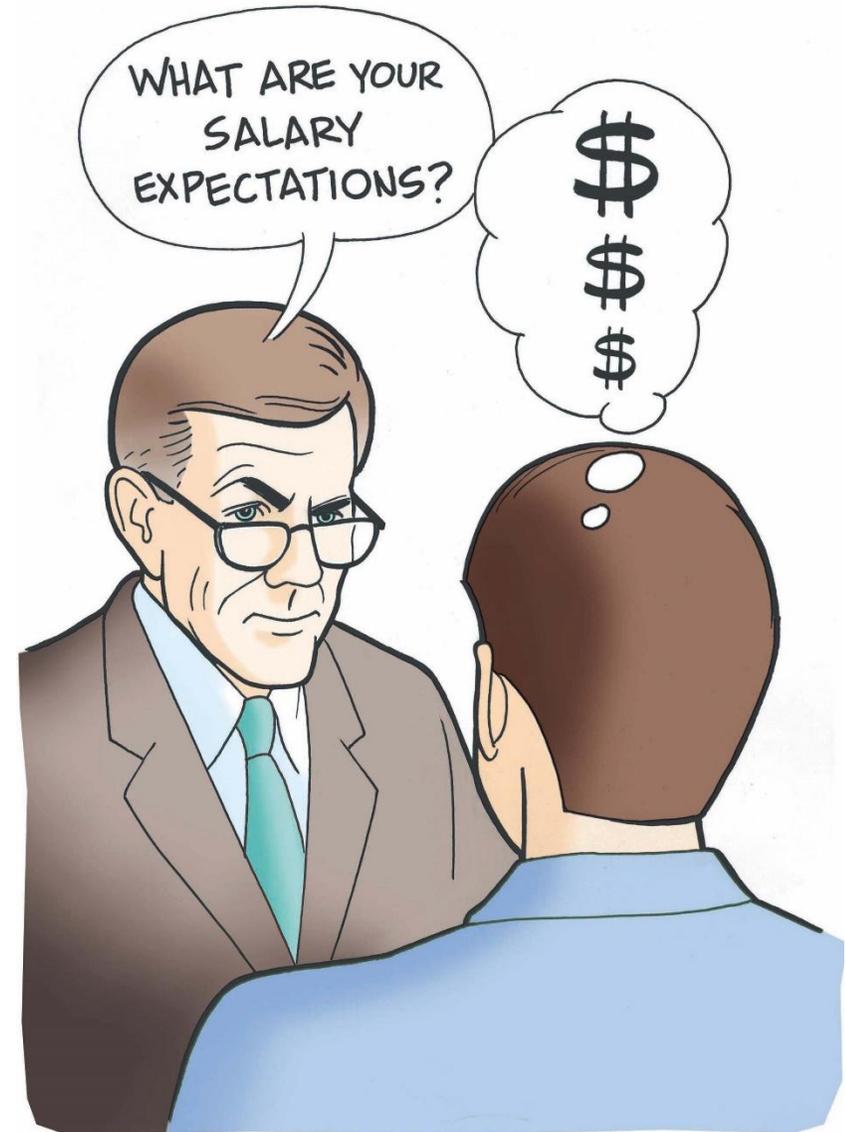

Where do you see yourself in 5 years?

Employers seek candidates who have a vision for themselves. In any profession there are many different stages of growth. You need to set the highest achievable position as your goal. You must be able to tell the interviewers that you wish to hold a particular senior position at the end of 5 years.

What is your salary expectation and why?

It can be easy for an experienced candidate to set a salary expectation based on the last drawn salary. In case of freshers, it can be difficult to choose a salary expectation. You may be asked to justify your expectation. You need to be well prepared to tackle this question wisely.
