

Education system in Canada

The education system in Canada depends a lot on what province we speak about.

We will take the most common training system and tell you about it.

CANADA

Levels in Canadian education

Preschool or nursery school for children aged five and under includes some preschool daycare programs, junior kindergarten (in Ontario only) and kindergarten, which is a requirement in most provinces excepts for province in the prairies.

Levels
In Canadian
education

Elementary school runs from grades one thorough six (ages 6 to 12).

Junior high school might also be called senior public schools or middle school and is found in most provinces. In a few select areas, schools may run from K to 8. In most provinces junior high school runs from grades 6 through 9 (age 12-15) although in Ontario, it ends at grade eight (age 14).

Levels
In Canadian
education

High school ends in grade 12 (age 18).

Upon graduation from high school, children may enter the workforce or enter university, college or a career school.

In Quebec schools, instruction is primarily in French but in general, Canadian schools teach in English.

Levels
In Canadian
education

In Canada, there are both paid and free schools. In this country, children can choose the subjects that interest them and study them during their school life. Thus, students have more time for what they really need. (Each student is given his own timetable.)

Classes begin at eight twenty-five in the morning and end at two o'clock eleven minutes of day. Such exact figures are necessary for students to become accustomed to punctuality. (The time of the beginning and the end of classes can be different, depending on which school we are talking about.)

Usually there are six lessons in the timetable, one of which is either a class hour or a free lesson. During a free lesson, students can turn to teachers for help on subjects or do homework. Also in schools there is a big break for lunch. After class, many students remain at after-s

The school uniform of Canada is common in private schools. In public schools, the school uniform is not required. But still in most schools there is a dress code.

Perhaps the education system in Canada is not perfect, but they do not study on Saturdays.

Thank you for your attention!

