There's not a barber in England who hasn't been inundated with demands for the Peaky Blinders undercut.

Shorn rough at the sides with length on top, the reason it works so well is that it accentuates the man's enviable bone structure - it wouldn't suit a fuller or more rounded face nearly as

In the series, the woolen “newsboy” or “baker boy” caps are the real armour, with a razor blade concealed in the brim, giving the gang their ‘Peaky Blinders’ . Moniker “baker boys” were typically working-class hats and stood out against more formal fedoras or other wide brim hats worn by wealthier classes. The series made these simple caps very popular
