Text

People have always polluted their surroundings. But until now pollution was not such a serious problem. In past most people lived in uncrowded rural areas and didn't have pollution-causing machines. But with the development of crowded industrial cities the problem of pollution has become more important. Using automobiles and other machines made pollution steadily worse.

A propeller airplane is shown flying in the upper right quadrant of the image, releasing a large plume of white smoke or dust. The background is a dramatic sky with dark, heavy clouds. In the foreground and middle ground, there is a vast, chaotic pile of various pieces of trash, including plastic bottles, bags, and other debris. To the right, several tall, thin, dead trees stand against the sky, their branches bare and skeletal. The overall scene conveys a sense of environmental devastation and the impact of human activity.

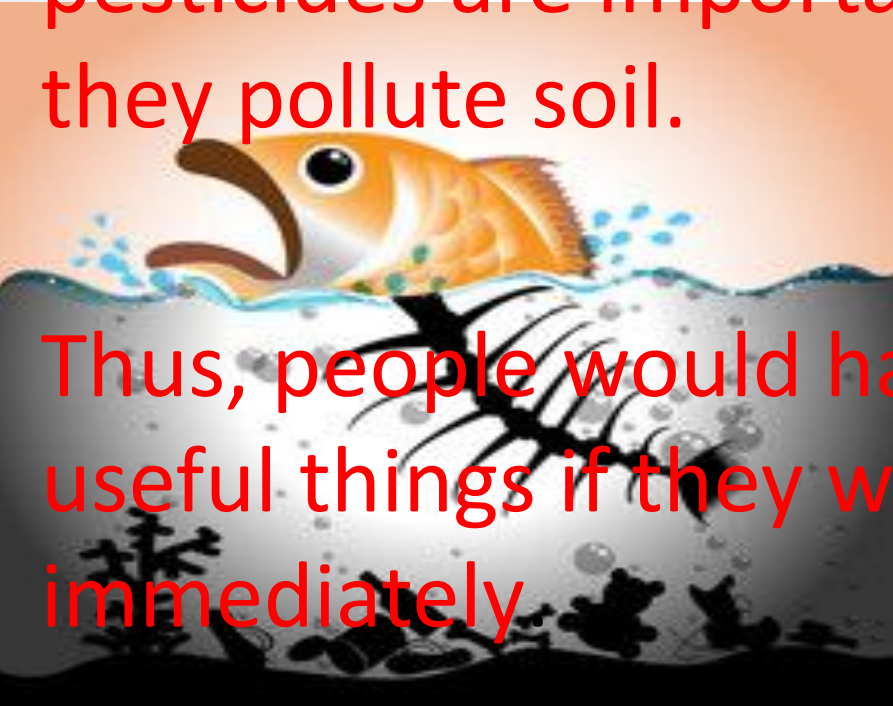

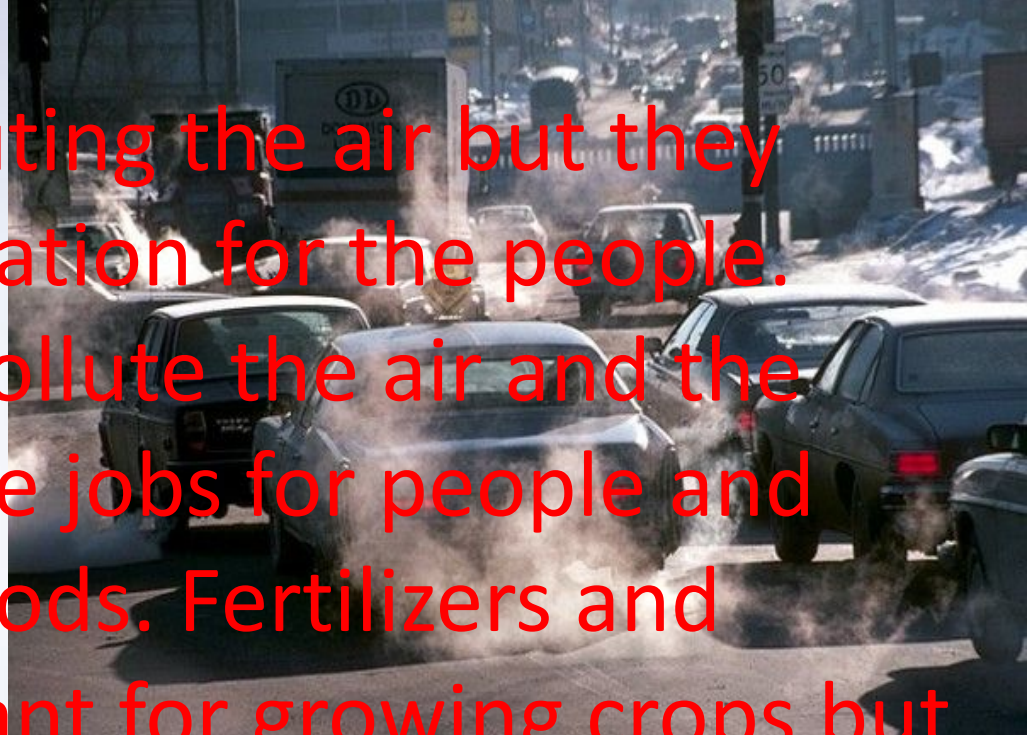

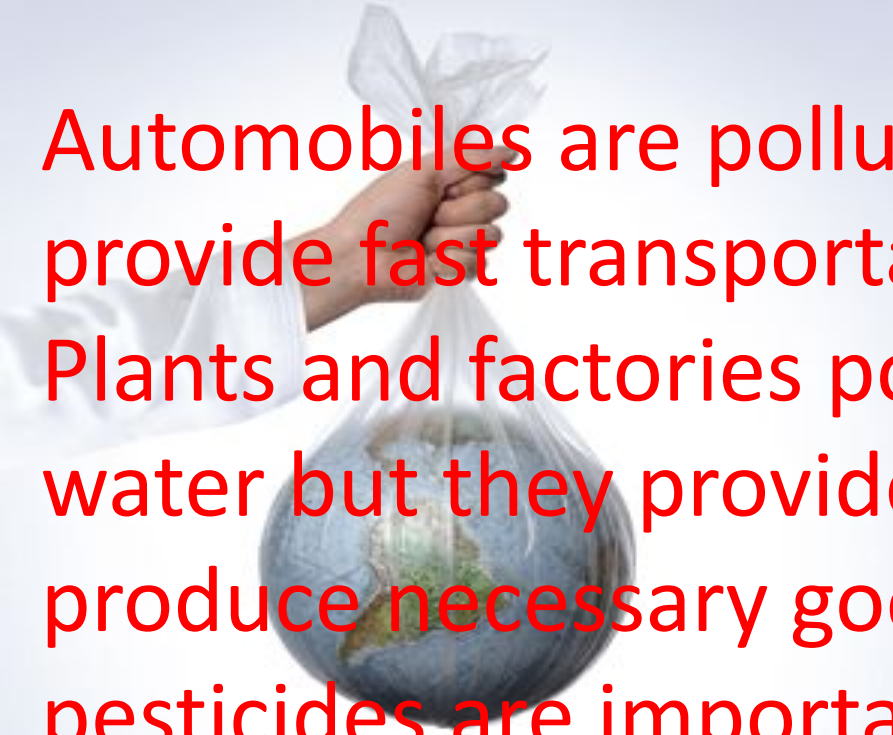

Air, water, and soil are necessary for existence of all living things. But polluted air can cause illness, and even death. Polluted water kills fish and other marine life. On polluted soil, food products can't be grown. In addition environmental pollution spoils the natural beauty of our planet.

Automobiles are polluting the air but they provide fast transportation for the people. Plants and factories pollute the air and the water but they provide jobs for people and produce necessary goods. Fertilizers and pesticides are important for growing crops but they pollute soil.

Thus, people would have to stop using many useful things if they wanted to end pollution immediately

A dark, atmospheric scene featuring a man's face appearing within a large, billowing white cloud. The man has a somber expression and is wearing glasses. The background is a deep black sky, with several smokestacks visible on the left side, emitting a thick, dark plume of smoke that drifts across the lower right portion of the frame. The overall mood is one of finality and environmental concern.
