        helpers.bindEvents(this, this.options.tooltipEvents, fu var activeSegments = (evt.type !== 'mouseout') ? thi helpers.each(this.segments, function(segment){ getSegmentsAtEvent : function(e){ var segmentsArray = [];

    var location = helpers.getRelativePosition(e); helpers.each(this.segments, function(segment, i){ if (segment.inRange(location, this.options.tooltipR))

At the same time
I think I`m good
at programming

And I love
computer
games, so I
may work as a game
designer

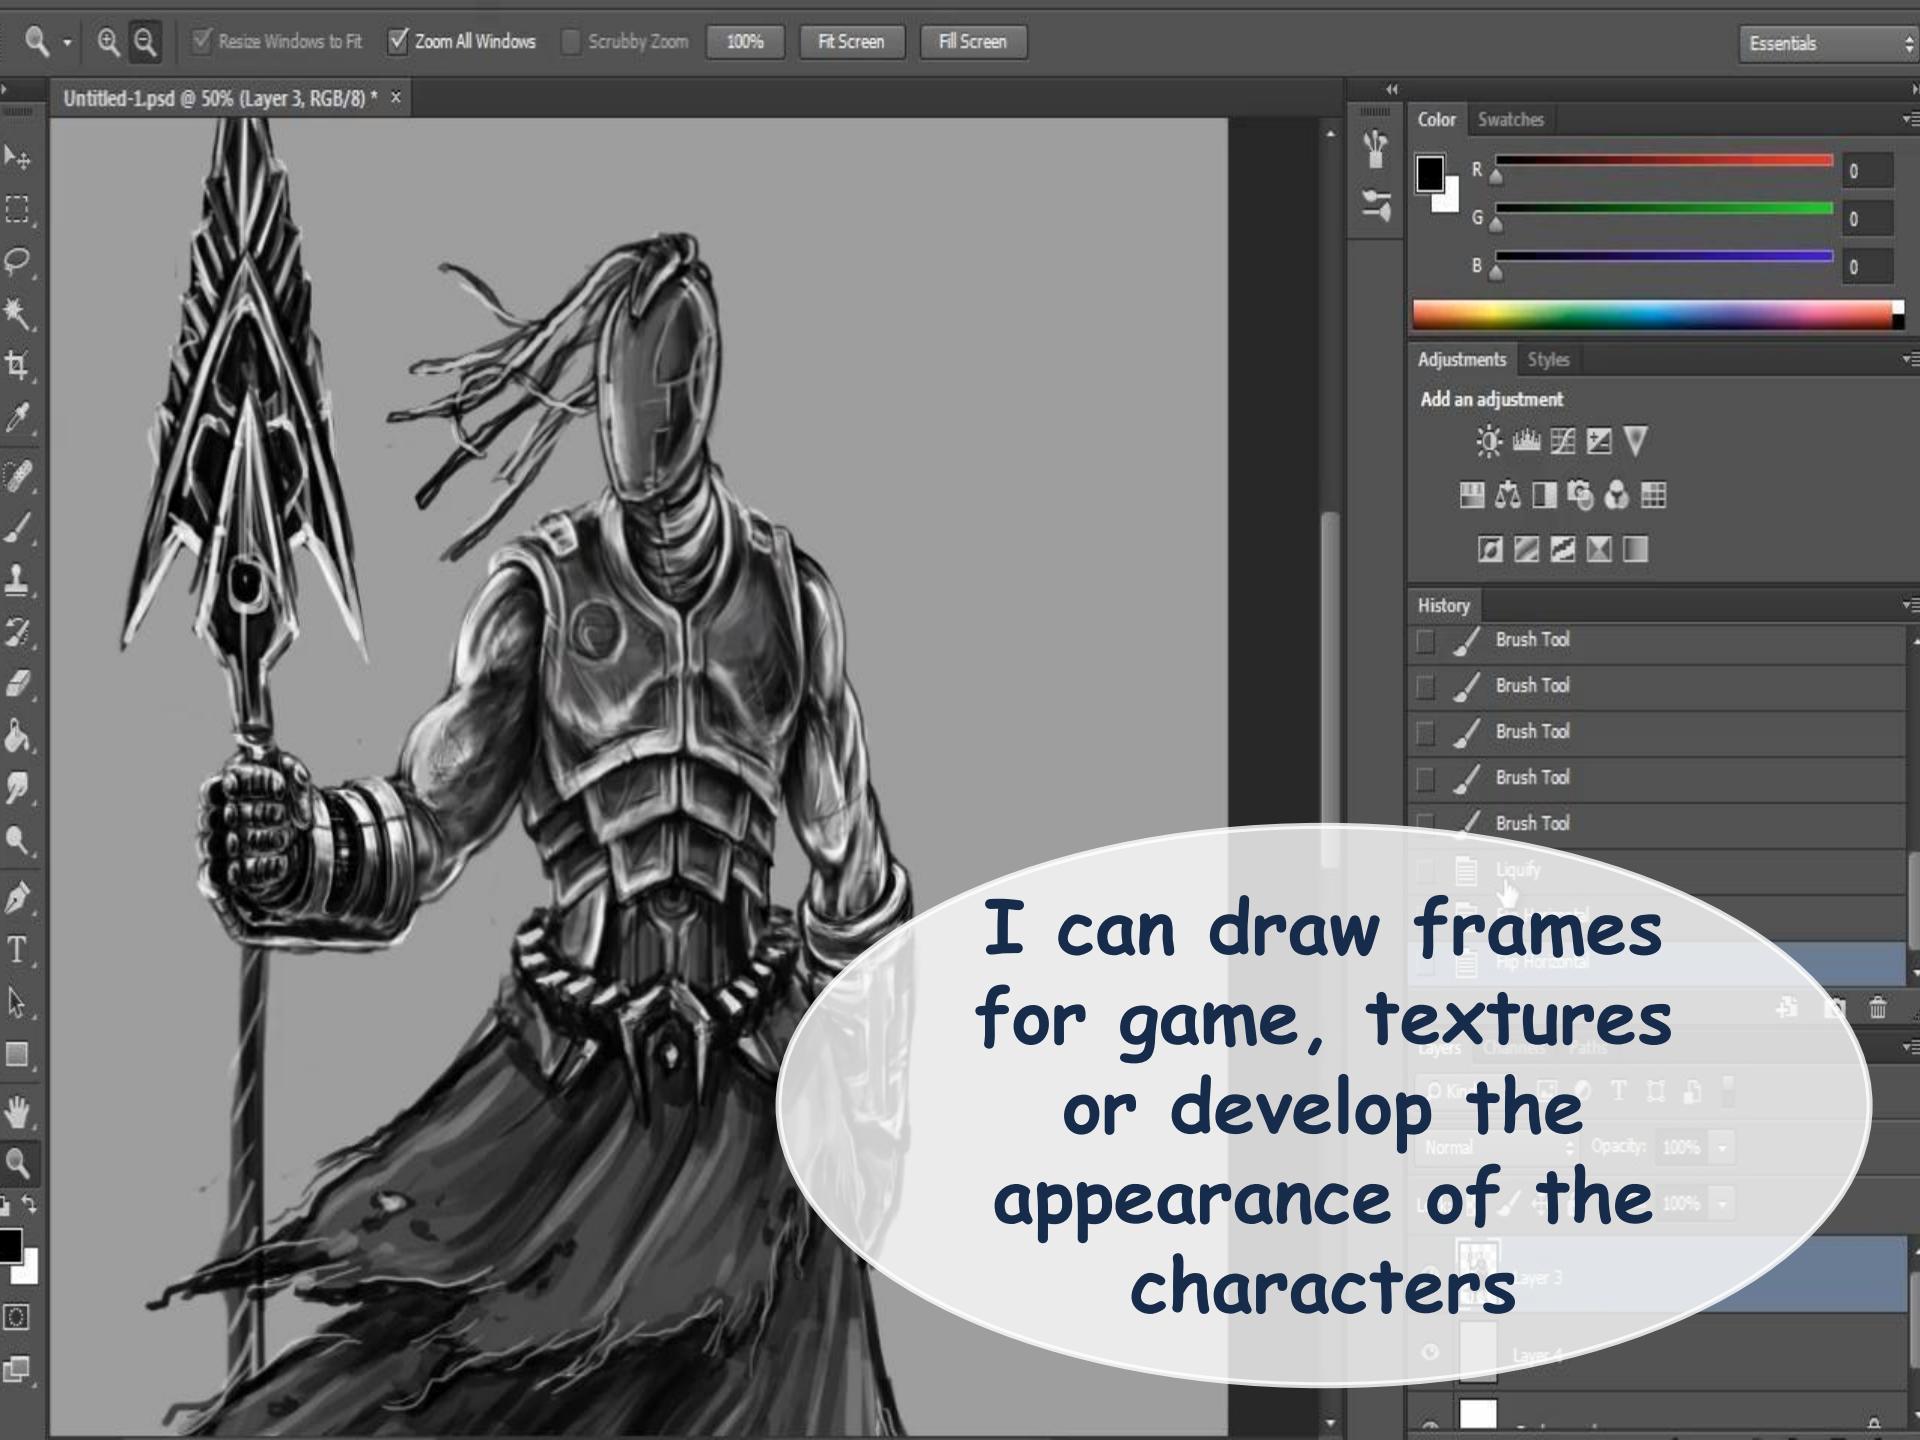

An overhead view of a large wooden conference table where several people are working. The table is cluttered with various office supplies: two computer monitors, multiple keyboards, mouse pads, coffee cups, folders, and documents. Some people are looking at their phones, others at documents or laptops. The scene depicts a collaborative work environment.

Game design
is a complex
process

Groups of people
are working on different parts
of project

I can draw frames for game, textures or develop the appearance of the characters

I can't make something in 3D, but there are a lot of popular games with simple graphics

Even I want to draw comics and have a lot of fans like «big artists». It's not that profitable, but very pleasant

I've already done a few, but they are not popular... At all...

In conclusion I would like to say, that you should love your work and love, what you do
