EXAMPLE S

I'm Aleksandar Stankovic and i'm student at Faculty of Technical Science, Novi Sad. Since i was young i was occupied with programming and computing in general. I made my first programming steps in elementary school, when i was part of "Summer school of programming". Later in high school i had great head teacher. She was enthusiastic and i had fun on every programming class. Today on college i'm pretty satisfied with courses i have. Professors are open for any kind of help, and that is reason more to continue hard working.

Except of computing, travelling is my big passion. I've been in western Europe on some sightseeing tours. I've met different kinds of culture and people. I've tried their traditional food and drinks. It was nice, but i would like to visit Moscow and feel eastern Europe. It would be nice to meet your students and see their lifestyles.

This is great opportunity for me to explore, learn and earn new friends and colleagues. I'm looking forward to your answer.

Yours sincerely,

Aleksandar Stankovic

Ja Lublu Rossiya!

Russia, the largest country in the world that gave the world amazing scientists such as Cherenkov, Borodin and Gamow; pioneered the way to space with brave cosmonauts like Yuri Gagarin and continue to provide the world with oil, depressing literature about gulags and great vodka.

As a Swede, i have been brought up learning to fear the Russian bear to the east. But since getting to know many Russians, at school and privately, i have always gotten along with them. I appreciate their brutal honesty and no nonsense attitude to everything. They have a fascinating culture and outlook on life which i love to learn about, and would definitely appreciate the chance to be able to go to the mighty capital to see the Kremlin, the Red square, the cathedrals, ride the metro system and of particular interest for me is the museum of astronautics. I can imagine myself as a kind of ambassador for Sweden, with a mission to learn as much as possible about Russia, to be able to tell people at home about my experiences and of the Russian people.

I am an engineering student at Chalmers University of Technology in Gothenberg, Sweden. I am Swedish but have lived in 4 different countries which gives me an understanding for different cultures and ways of doing things. I love to learn new things and am not scared of any challenge. I am a fun and spontaneous person and have an easy time talking to people. I train a lot and in the winter i snowboard a lot. You NEED to have me on this course! In my class i am known as the guy that brings everyone together for events, such as a night out after exams or a night out at the hockey game.

The reason i applied for this event was that i feel i need to learn more about IT in general, even though i am very proficient with computers and a lot of programs, i still want to learn more! After reading the course description i felt that the academic level would be at a good level for me.

Trust me when i say that you will not find another applicant that wants to do IT! as much as i do.

Good luck!
