Sightseeing

The Admiralty.

It was built in 1806–1823 by architect Andrian Zakharov and closely connected with the foundation of the Russian Navy. This is a ship. This graceful needle spire is a symbol of St Petersburg.

This is the statue of Peter the Great on horseback.

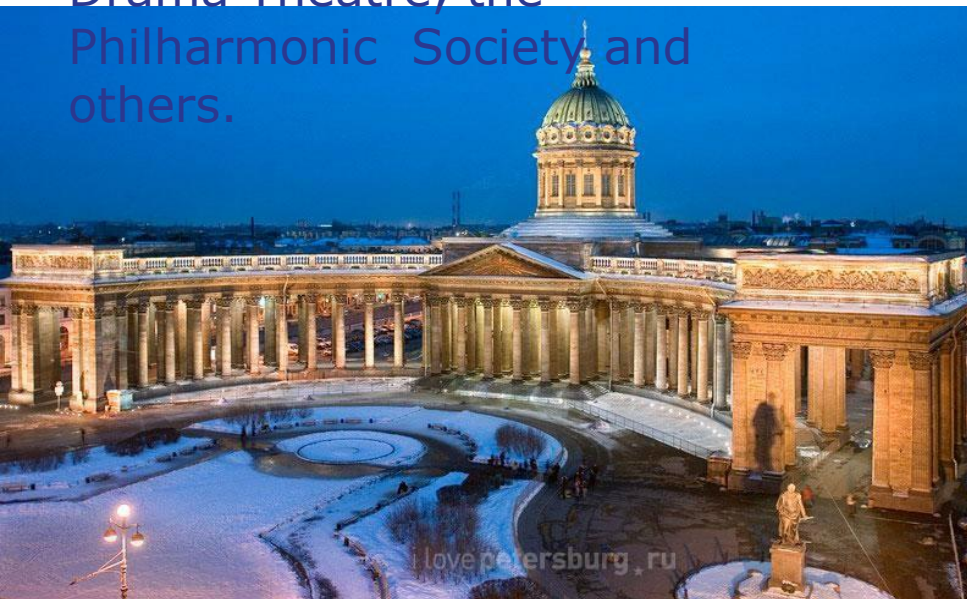

It was created by sculptor Etienne-Maurice Falconet in 1782. It is often called "The Bronze Horseman" after a poem written by Palace Square with the world's tallest monolith – Alexander Column (45.7 m high). It was built in 1837 by Montferrand in honour of the victory of Russia in the Patriotic War of 1812 over Napoleon. The column stands thanks to gravity alone and is not attached to the pedestal in any way.

WINTER PALACE

There are more than 20 theatres in St Petersburg, including such well-known companies as the Mariinsky Opera and Ballet Theatre (architect Alberto Kavos, 1859), the Mussorgsky Maly Opera and Ballet Theatre, the Tovstonogov Academic Drama Theatre, the Philharmonic Society and others.

Nevsky Prospect is the main street of St-Petersburg. To the left you can see Kazan Cathedral with the statues of Field — Marshals Kutuzov and Barclay de Tolly. The architect is Andrey
