JOURNEY TO THE CENTER OF THE EARTH

Genre: adventure,
comedy

Director - Eric Brevig

Producer - Brendan Fraser,

Beau Flynn,

Charlotte Clay Huggins

Author script: Jules Verne (original source)

PLOT

Freaky Professor Trevor Anderson (Brendan Fraser), laughed at by his colleagues for his eccentric theories, travels with his nephew Sean across Iceland. Anderson's brother went missing in those parts. But he left behind a memory - the book "Journey to the Center of the Earth", supplied with a huge number of notes. Among these marks, they find the name of a famous professor, but after arriving in Iceland, they find that he died long ago. But his daughter Hannah is still alive, who is skeptical about the achievements of her father, but kindly agrees to take Trevor and Sean to the extinct volcano for 5 thousand Icelandic crowns per hour. Due to the thunderstorm, the cave in which they were hiding was filled up with a lightning strike and the heroes had to look for another way up. In the cave, they find their way to abandoned mines, and then deposits of diamonds. They find themselves on unstable ground - muscled and sink into the ground. In the bowels of the travelers, an amazing underground world ("the world within the world") opens up, inhabited by dangerous and strange creatures. Having found the "dwelling" of the missing Max (Sean's father) and his diary in the tree, they learn that in a few hours the temperature will rise "to 200 degrees" (Fahrenheit), and they may burn out. The travelers decide to run upstairs.

PLOT

The first difficulty is the temperature regime of the world in the center of the Earth. The heroes of the film will have to swim across a huge sea teeming with predatory fish and Mauisaur, or be in the air with a temperature of 50 degrees Celsius. They build a raft and set sail to reach a "geyser well" that will bring them to the surface, according to the original source. On the way, many dangerous adventures await friends, such as the battle with the Giganotosaurus and crossing the magnetic bridge, but in the end they are thrown to the surface by a geyser through Vesuvius in Italy.

From underground, Sean takes with him a handful of diamonds and a luminescent bird that has become extinct in our world, which helped him during his journey.

MOVIE FACTS

When Trevor ignites the flash and the wall ignites with magnesium, he must burn himself. The scene in the film was the second take of the day, and Brendan Fraser really burned himself out in this shot. He held the road flash too perpendicular and too close to the wall, so the flames bounced off the wall and blew back towards his bare hand. The screams he utters were a mixture of real pain and acting. Production was stopped for several days.
