

Carl Jung was born in Kesswil and grew up in Basel, Switzerland. Though he was a very introverted child, he learned brilliantly.

In 1906-1912 Jung and Freud had very close relationships. Freud regarded him as a sort of his protégé, spoke of Jung as his “heir”, once even as "my successor and crown prince". But Freud didn't take seriously Jung's interest in religion and myths, which offended Jung, and their relationships terminated for good.

A tough period of Jung's life followed. For about 5 years he was obsessed with the investigation of his fantasies, dreams and even visions. This analysis of his own mind laid the foundations of his theories and ideas. Finally one of the best-known Jung's works was published – "Psychological Types".

Toni Wolff
(1910-1950?)

“Carl Jung’s love affairs”

Sabina Spielrein (1904-1909)

Emma Rauschenbach (Jung) and Carl Jung (1903-1955)