Russia, the Duke of Izhora, the Field Marshal

The tsar trusted Menshikov with all his most important business. His main duty was to realize all Peter's projects. But he was well-known for his machinations. Menshikov was given Vasilievsky Island as a present in 1709. Later, in 1714, the tsar took back his present.

Menshikov was the first general governor of St Petersburg and did much for its development.

In 1710, the large stone palace with a garden was laid. It was the most luxurious building in St Petersburg after the project of the architect Giovanni Mario Fontana.

The style of this palace successfully combined traditional Russian and West European methods and forms of architecture.

In this luxurious palace lavish festivities, great banquets and official diplomatic receptions were held. Painting have been used in its rich and original ornamentation.

Since 1731, the palace housed a privileged military educational establishment, known later as the first Cadet School.

In 1981, the palace became a branch of the State Hermitage. The building itself and its restored interiors are the most important exhibits of this museum.

This palace is the fine example of a private house of the first quarter of the 18th century preserved till our days.
