BREXIT DEAL ON EDGE

CHOCOLATE TREAT

By TOM NEWTON DUNN
Political Editor

A BREXIT deal could go down to the October 31 wire after No10 admitted for the first time that one may not be done by this week's EU summit deadline.

A meeting of Europe's 28 leaders in Brussels on Thursday is the last moment to agree an exit package before a law by MPs to delay our EU exit by three months kicks in. Lowering expectations ahead of it, the PM's official spokesman said: "We want to make progress at the council."

If there is no deal in place by the end of the summit, Mr Johnson faces a titanic battle with Parliament to overturn the law that will see UK membership extended until January 31. And EU chiefs said last night it will be almost impossible to agree a new deal this week, paving the way for an emergency summit next week.

Talks may go on to Halloween deadline

But despite the odds, the PM's senior aides were still holding out hope that an agreed legal text for a new solution to the Irish border dilemma is still possible by tomorrow night's cut-off.

Ongoing negotiations in Brussels were "more positive yesterday, one said, as the No10 source dubbed the EU "in deal mode now". The next 36 hours of the talks are deemed crucial to crack a solution for the two outstanding issues of customs and consent.

No10 insisted there would still be time to pass the Withdrawal Act through Parliament if negotiations slip into next week - as they'll force MPs to work through the night.

The PM's official spokesman added: "The public would expect we work round the clock in order to pass that legislation in time for October 31." Irish PM Leo Varadkar's deputy Simon Coveney raised the prospect of an emergency EU Council next week - but only if the UK compromises further.

It came amid talk of a fudge that would see leaders sign off on a political deal before the 31st but leave the technical details for later.

JAV'S NOV 6 BREX BUDGET

CHANCELLOR Sajid Javid will deliver a post-Brexit Budget on November 6 if the UK gets an EU deal, he announced yesterday.

But a No Deal Brexit will mean an emergency economic statement to steady nerves instead.

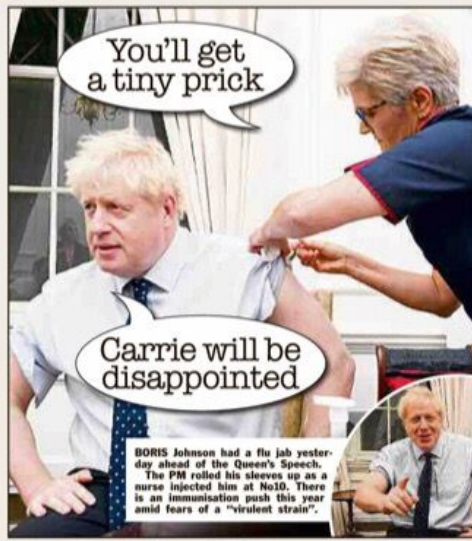

Corb: Vote 'in weeks'

JEREMY Corbyn has hinted he could back a general election "within weeks".

The Labour leader is facing a growing revolt from his Shadow Cabinet and MPs, who are desperately battling for a second Brexit referendum first.

But replying to Tory jibes, he told the Commons: "We may be just weeks away from the first Queen's Speech of a Labour government."

Seething Labour backbenchers last night warned the leadership they are not ready for an election.

Trade fight... Angela Merkel

Merkel: We fear Britain after Brexit

ANGELA Merkel fears post-Brexit Britain will be a major competitor to the EU like the US and China.

The German Chancellor said the UK will be able to battle the bloc for a slice of global trade once it has left.

Speaking after a dinner with Emmanuel Macron, she called for closer commercial cooperation between Paris and Berlin. She said: "We will do all this in the knowledge that, with the departure of Britain, a potential competitor will emerge for us."

Her remarks come amid unease in Brussels about Boris Johnson's insistence that the UK breaks free from EU rules after Brexit.

Typhoon Hagibis: 48 dead

By NICK PARKER

TYPHOON Hagibis has killed 48 people in Japan with the death toll expected to rise.

Last night, 110,000 rescuers had been deployed to wade through water and debris in the search for bodies and survivors.

The 140mph storm has ravaged the country's central and eastern regions. Hagibis - which means "speed" - made landfall in Hamanai on Saturday before heading out to sea early Sunday.

It's the worst storm to hit the country in decades and has cancelled three Rugby World Cup matches.

Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, 65, said: "There are still many residents who are unaccounted for. We are working day and night in search and rescue operations."

5IN BRAN FLAKE

Brekking news... sized up

By HANNAH STUBBS

A STUNNED mum tipped out a 5in bran flake as big as a cereal bowl.

Angie Parker, 38, reckons the breakfast monster is 12 times larger than normal. The teacher's kids Oscar and India were thrilled at the suppersized find - in an 83p box of Harvest Morn Bran Flakes, right. Angie, who had bought it from Aldi, posted a pic of daughter India, eight, holding two to compare.

The retailer replied: "That's one mega bran flake you found there. We're sorry to see this, and we'll pass your feedback on to our colleagues here."

But Angie, of Worcester, said: "My two kids were ridiculously excited to find such a giant bran flake."

"They put 12 normal bran flakes on top. There's so much horrid news. You can't beat a giant bran flake to brighten things up!"

In 2017 Steven Marriott, of West Bridgford, Notts, claimed to have found the world's biggest bran flake at 5 1/2 inches.

But last year Oliver Broadfield, eight, of Huddersfield, found one closer to 5in.

Hard to swallow

BRAN Flakes are not the only food to go large - or extra small.

Sean Stewart, 22, of North Lanarks, found a triple-sized Frazzle in his packet in August.

London student Hinay Lad, 22, below, thought a bit of ceiling fell off when he saw a 6in Crunchy Nut Cornflake in his cereal bowl last year.

But Steve Smith, 41, of Bristol, opened a tin of beans in September - and found just one in it.

Bulgarian football chief: We have no problem with racism

Sickening... Bulgarian fans chant and do Nazi salutes at game last night

LAST NIGHT...

Monkey chants & Nazi salutes

From NICK PARKER, in Sofia

ENGLAND'S Euro 2020 qualifier in Sofia was halted twice last night because of racist abuse by local thugs — days after Bulgaria's football chief insisted the team's fans were not bigots.

Bulgarian yobs targeted our black stars with monkey noises and Nazi salutes after England took the lead seven minutes into the game.

It came just five days after Borislav Mikhailov, president of the Bulgarian Football Union, insisted the country had no problem with racism.

He had tried to deflect the blame on to English fans, referring to "recent problems with racist behaviour in English club football".

Raheem Sterling, who scored twice in England's 6-0 victory, was singled out last night with a series of disgusting chants.

Croatian referee Ivan Bebek first stopped the match in the 28th minute after England skipper Harry Kane protested at the abuse directed towards Sterling.

A stadium announcement then condemned the abuse and warned the match would be abandoned if it continued. The warning had little effect and the game had to be stopped again in the 43rd minute. It restarted again after the referee consulted with England boss Gareth Southgate.

England fans responded by chanting: "You know what you are — you racist b". As supporters sang the National Anthem, Bulgarian thugs gave Nazi salutes and offensive gestures.

Sections of Sofia's Levski Stadium had been shut after Bulgaria were sanctioned for racist chanting during their qualifiers against Kosovo and the Czech Republic. Last night a group of fans dressed in black behind a "Lauta Army" banner seemed to be the source of the worst abuse.

The so-called "Ultras" hooligans appeared to be moved out of the front of the south stand after the second stoppage.

After the game England fans told of their disgust and praised officials for stopping the game.

Carol Perrin, 54, a nurse from Stockton-on-Tees, Co Durham, said: "I think there comes a time when you must make a stand. This way you put the message across. You have to put yourself in a black players' shoes." Bulgarian coach Krasimir Balakov slammed England fans for booing the national anthem and insisted: "I personally did not hear the chanting." He went on: "This really has never happened before in our games."

Sport minister Nigel Adams said he expects "tough action" from Uefa. He tweeted last night: "Racism should never be tolerated."

WORST PAEDO IN JAIL 'BY SEX BEAST'

THE prime suspect in the murder of Britain's worst paedophile is a sex fiend who has boasted: "I love raping women."

Paul Fitzgerald, 28, was being held in segregation following the jail stabbing of Richard Huckle, 33. Huckle was found lying in a pool of blood on Sunday in his cell at top security Full Sutton Prison in East Yorkshire.

A source said: "The air ambulance was called but by then it was too late. It was a targeted attack. There was no chance of saving him."

Fitzgerald, who was born in Northern Ireland, was detained aged 19 for sexually assaulting a girl. He was jailed for a minimum of 20 years.

Police found an entry in his diary which read: "I love raping women". He also wrote about paedophile fantasies.

£1.5k fine for having wild cat in house

By BEN LEO

A MAN who kept an "aggressive" African wild cat in his suburban home without a licence has been fined £1,500.

Police found the pure-bred serval in an underground room at Daniel Collard's house in Dagnall Hill, Kent.

Their "dangerous wild animal" status means owners need a local authority licence, and appropriate housing to keep them at home.

Collins, 47, told officers he had an "aggressive Savannah cat" that was "not allowed to go out".

Police officially seized the cat, which was identified instead as a wild African serval.

Collins, who did not appear at Bromley magistrates' court, was fined and told to pay costs for keeping a dangerous wild animal without a licence.

gave fat lass peck on lips to boost her confidence

On trial... Gascoigne yesterday

FOOTBALL legend Paul Gascoigne told police he kissed a "fat lass" on the lips during a train journey to boost her confidence, his trial heard yesterday.

Gascoigne, 52, allegedly lunged drunkenly at the woman, putting his hands on her cheeks and kissing her "forcefully and sloppily on the lips".

She got off the train at the next station and contacted police, who later interviewed Gascoigne at a hotel.

Prosecutor William Mounsey QC said: "He immediately told them he knew what it was about - that he had 'kissed a fat lass'."

Instead of showing contrition, she stamped on her foot and attacked her.

Ms Coyne claimed damages for assault, battery, false imprisonment, breach of her right to privacy and died at age 46 in January 2008, denied the claim.

By ROBIN PERRIE

had heard someone abuse her about her build and he had given her a peck on the lips to reassure her that he felt sorry for her.

"It did not appear to show that what he had done was not serious or anything to be bothered about."

The woman yesterday told the jury she was heading home to Newcastle when a drunk in a seat behind her started causing a commotion.

She added: "He was very noisy, there were lots of drink cans and food on the floor. He seemed intoxicated. He was shouting, swearing, general noise. He did not make much sense."

"Midway through the journey he asked if I was a palm reader. I said 'No' and just kept looking forward."

Ex-England, Spurs and Newcastle midfielder Gascoigne got up to move his suitcase - then returned and tried to sit on the woman's lap.

"Beside crown court house, it was not too far from where I needed to get off so I did not want to do anything to antagonise or make a fuss."

"Then he tapped my arm and I turned around to face him."

"He grabbed my face and kissed me full on the lips. It came completely out of the blue."

"I pushed him off. I said 'That is not OK, get off!' My mouth was definitely closed but his lips were around my lips. It was a sloppy kiss over my mouth, for about three seconds."

The jury heard just before he kissed the woman, Gascoigne told her "You're not fat, you're beautiful!"

When other passengers protested about his behaviour he is said to have told them: "I just wanted to give her some confidence."

Gascoigne, who was on the train with two teenage nephews, also allegedly insulted another woman passenger who took him to task.

Rebecca Jacques told the court: "He said to me it would not have been me because I was buck-toothed and ugly."

"I said to him 'You can insult me all you like - it was sexual assault. You should not have done that.'"

The court was told Gascoigne's alleged victim had no idea at the time he was famous - and only found out later from a TV report.

Mr Mounsey described it as "a brief but unpleasant case of assault with sexual overtones."

The prosecutor said Gascoigne insists his actions were not sexual.

But, he added, for the women it was "shocking and frightening."

Gascoigne, of Leicester, denies sexual assault. The trial continues.

Kent 7th in world for kind acts

By ADAM BENNETT

THE UK has been ranked seventh in a global study into people's generosity and good causes.

The Aid Foundation asked folk if they had helped a stranger, given money or volunteered in the month before being interviewed.

The research, which took place over a decade, surveyed 14 million people in 128 countries.

Figures from annual surveys between 2009 and 2016 were combined.

The World Giving Index 2018 edition identified the US as the most generous country while China was bottom.

In the UK, 60 per cent of people surveyed in the survey donated to charity and 71 per cent volunteered their time.

Other top countries were: 3 New Zealand, 4 Austria, 5 Sweden, 6 Netherlands, 9 Latvia, 10 Indonesia.

A FLIGHT attendant allegedly attacked by the Cranberries star Dolores O'Riordan is suing her estate.

Dublin's High Court heard yesterday.

Cornel Coyne was working on a flight from New York to Shannon in Ireland in 2014 when the alleged incident occurred.

It is said Ms O'Riordan stamped on her foot and attacked her.

Ms Coyne claimed damages for assault, battery, false imprisonment, breach of her right to privacy and died at age 46 in January 2008, denied the claim.

MY DROOPY EYES 'NOT DRUGS'

HARRY Redknapp's son told a court the "droopy" eyes he inherited from his dad were not to blame for drugs wrongly given to him.

Cops who pulled over property developer Mark, 49, in his Mercedes were suspicious of his bloodshot and saggy eyes and said he kept cleaning his teeth with his tongue.

But Redknapp told MPs in Poole, Dorset, "Unfortunately, having droopy, heavy eyes is a genetic condition my father has them and so do I."

He denies driving after taking cocaine. Philip Lucas, defending, said a roadside drug test was not carried out properly. The case will continue on October 21.

FIT-AGAIN AVRIL IS READY TO SK8 BACK TO BRITAIN

AVRIL LAVIGNE will return to the UK next year for two major shows – after nearly nine years away.

The Sk8er Boi singer, whose debut album Let Go came out in 2002, almost died after contracting Lyme disease in 2014 but is now making a monumental comeback.

I can reveal she will perform at London's Brixton Academy on April 1 and Manchester's O2 Apollo the following night as she takes her Head Above Water tour global.

It promises to feature some of her biggest hits, including Girlfriend, I'm With You and Complicated, plus tracks from new album Head Above Water – her first for six years. Since being discovered as a 16-year-old the Canadian singer-songwriter has scored seven UK top ten hits and sold more than 40 million albums.

She has fallen back in love with singing and performing after taking her show around the United States and she can't wait to bring it to this side of the Pond.

Avril said: "I can't believe how quickly it went by. "I truly missed being on stage, singing has brought me so much happiness."

Tickets for the tour, which also includes ten dates across Europe, go on sale on Friday. After all that she has been through, it will be great to have her back.

WEIGHT FELL FROM 23ST

GASTRIC OP MUM STARVES TO DEATH

Kimberley was just 5st

A MUM starved to death after a gastric bypass as her weight fell to five stone.

Kimberley Wall, who once weighed 23st, had surgery over fears her obesity would kill her. But afterwards the mum-of-three could only manage two mouthfuls of food and suffered stomach pains and nausea. Ex-nursery nurse Kimberley, of Rochdale, who lost 18st over ten years, finally became too weak to get out of bed. She was admitted to intensive care last October but died a week later of heart failure due to malnutrition. Mum Mariel Stephenson told an inquest in Heywood. "She was frail and confused." "She loved the fact she lost so much weight but she could hardly eat anything. As time went by she became more and more depressed and paranoid."

In 2014 Kimberley, right, spoke out to say the surgery ruined her life. She said: "I thought it would give me the life I'd dreamed of but I couldn't have been more wrong. I wish I'd never done it." Coroner Matthew Cox, recording a narrative verdict, said nutrition problems were a "rare but recognised" bypass complication. He added: "There are risks as well as benefits."

£100k bid for action by stab lad family

By RICHARD MORIARTY
THE family of a teen last knifed to death by the son of a millionaire has launched a £100,000 fundraising campaign to begin new legal action.

Yousef Makkli, 17, was stabbed by pal John Moinar, 18, as the pair had a drug-related row in an affluent suburb street. A jury cleared Moinar of murder and manslaughter - accepting he acted in self-defence. The Makkli family now want to raise £100,000 to fund a civil case.

Moinar is serving a 16-month detention order for possessing a knife in Hale Barns, Cheshire, and perverting justice. Yousef was named by his single mum Debbie on a council estate and won a scholarship to attend fee-paying Manchester Grammar school. Moinar's mother and father are both successful business people.

Fbook is 'rife' in jail

PRISON chiefs last year closed down ten social media accounts a week being updated while cars were behind bars. The report also saw a record number of mobile phone seizures. At Alconora, in Liverpool, had the most - 545. And 1,286 were found in the nation's 12 high security prisons.

BAPPY RETURNS

COMET 'MILESTONE'

A COMET found hurtling around the Sun at 72,000mph has been hailed a "milestone for astronomy". It is only the second interstellar object to be detected in our solar system following the appearance of the asteroid Oumuamua two years ago. The comet - named 2I/Borisov

CHILLI FOR TOP KIP

FORGET cocoa - a bowl of chilli, faggots or porridge and muffins are best for bedtime. Nutritionist Rhiannon Lambert said nutrients and chemicals in those foods aid sleep. These include magnesium, which lowers stress hormone cortisol, and amino acid tryptophan, that converts into sleep hormone melatonin. Rhiannon recommended a spooned milk containing turmeric and cinnamon for a nightcap. Her advice comes as a study by bedmaker Sealy UK found the average person wakes up tired four days a week.

S RABBITS SUFFER ILL HEALTH AND LONELINESS

- ### HOW TO BUY A RABBIT
- DO your research before taking on rabbits - be sure you can provide for them for their whole lifetime before bringing them home.
 - CHOOSE a breed or reputable breeder. Ask lots of questions and check the environment your bunny has been bred and reared in.
 - ASK to see veterinary paperwork and question whether the rabbits or their parents have had any health problems which could have been passed over.
 - Safe lap eared rabbits are more susceptible to health problems so it is worth considering getting bunnies with upwards pointing ears to avoid this risk.
 - FOR advice about caring for rabbits, go to regia.org.uk or facebook.com/rabbitcare.
