Tree Tunnel at Halnaker, England

England is mainly characterized by its beautiful castles. In Halnaker, a village in the district of Chichester in West Sussex, is located one of the most beautiful cathedrals in the country. However, in the ancient Roman road that linked London to Chichester there is a tunnel of trees which is photographers' favorite place. Its round shape gives it a strange and attractive look that turns the passage through it into a magnificent trip.

Tunnel of Love in Ukraine

- On December 4, 1937 on Cressent Meadow Road, in Yosemite National Park, a giant 2000 years old sequoia fell down completely blocking the street. The following summer an 8-foot tall, 17-foot wide tunnel was cut through it, which is today one of the major attractions of the park.

The Dark Hedges in Ireland

- According to the legend, the one who travels by Bregagd Road near the town of Ballycastle in Northern Ireland and passes through this tunnel can see the ghost of the “Lady Grey” wandering in the shadows. The grove was planted by the Stuart family over 300 years ago. Perhaps this is the most photographed road in Ireland.

Giant Elephant Appears to Emerge from a Cliff Face in Iceland

- A natural rock formation off the coast of Iceland looks very much like an elephant with its trunk dipped in the Atlantic. What makes it so 'real' is also that the cliff is mostly formed from basalt rock which look like the wrinkled elephant skin.

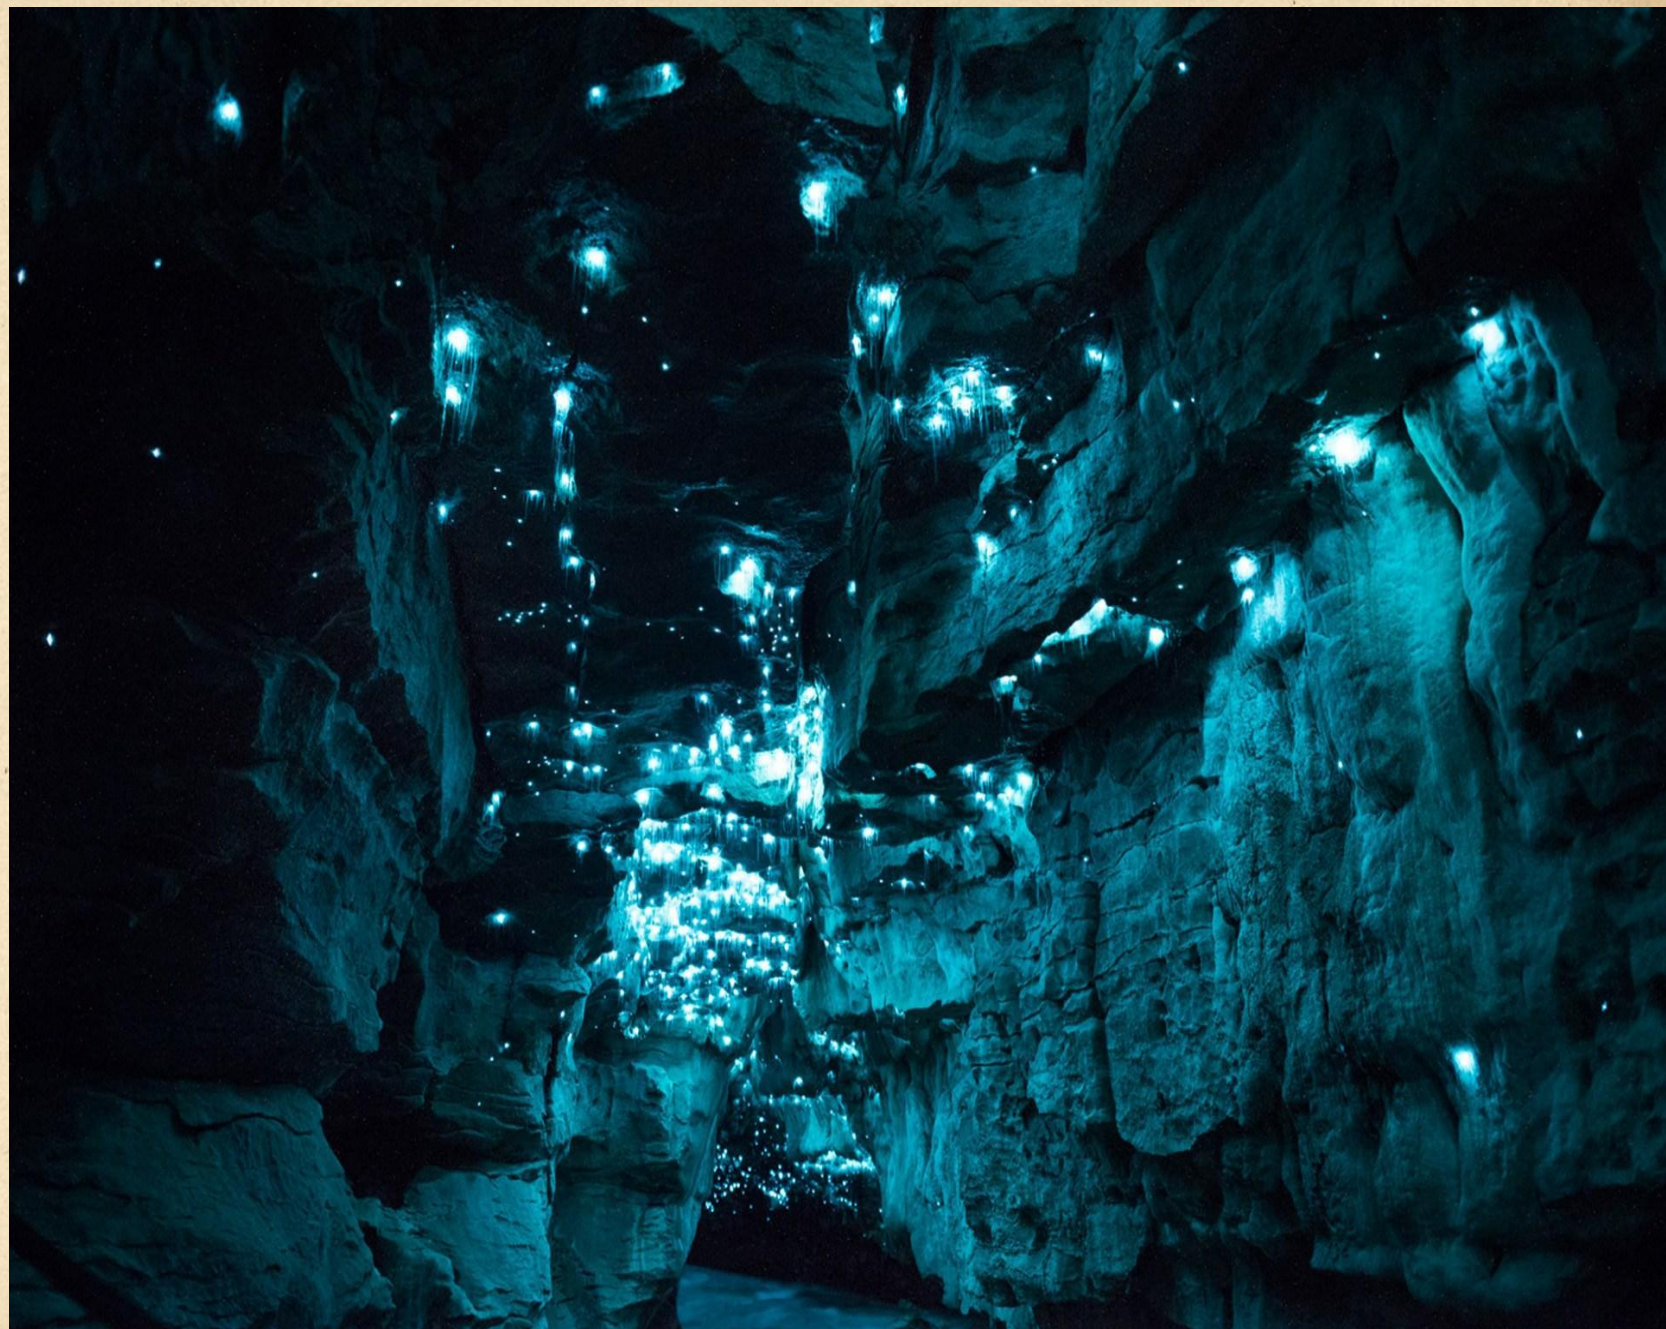

Fireflies dancing in a cave, New Zealand

- Fireflies Waitomo Cave in the North Island of New Zealand is known for its populations of fireflies - Arachnocampa luminosa. These fireflies were found only in New Zealand and have the size of the average mosquito. The cave is part of the Waitomo Cave, which includes the Cave and Aranui Ruakuri Cave. Fireflies Cave offers visitors three different levels and starts at the top level caves and catacombs.
