

Hi Zafar,
Tell me why is it that a Muslim is very particular about the word halal and haraam, what do they mean?

Hmmm

Can you give me an example.

Sure Tom, that which is permissible is termed halaal and that which is not
permissible is termed
haram and it is the Quran
which draws the distinction between the two.

Yess, Islam has prohibited blood of any type. You will agree that a chemical analysis of blood shows that it contains an abundance of uric acid, a chemical substance which can be injurious to human health.

You're right about the toxic nature of uric acid, in the human being it is excreted as a waste product and in fact we are told that 98% of the body's uric acid is extracted from the blood by the kidneys and removed through urination.

Now I think that you'll appreciate the special prescribed method of animal slaughter in Islam.

You see, the wielder of the knife, whilst taking the name of the "Almighty" makes an incision through the jugular veins, leaving all other veins and organs intact.

What do you mean?

Yess, were the organs, example the heart, the liver or the brain crippled or damaged, the animal could die immediately and its blood would congeal in its veins and would eventually permeate the flesh. This implies that the animal flesh would be permeated and contaminated with uric acid and therefore very poisonous, only today did our dieticians realize such a thing.

I see, this causes the death of the animal by total loss of blood from the body, rather than an injury to any vital organ.

Again, while on the topic of food, why do Muslims condemn the eating of pork or ham or any foods related to pigs or swine?

Actually, apart from the Quran prohibiting the consumption of pork, bacon (pig flesh); in fact the Bible too in Leviticus chapter 11, verse 8, regarding swine, it says, " of their flesh (of the swine, another name of pig) shall you not eat, and of their carcass you shall not touch; they are unclean to you.

Further, did you know that a pig cannot be slaughtered at the neck for it does not have a neck; that is according to its natural anatomy. A Muslim reason that if the pig was to be slaughtered and fit for human consumption the creator would have provided it with a neck.

None the less, all that aside, I am sure you are well informed about the harmful effects of the consumption of pork, in any form, be it pork chops, ham, bacon.

The medical science finds that there is a risk for various diseases the pig is found to be a host for many parasites and potential diseases

Yes, even apart from that, as we talked about uric acid content in the blood, it is important to note that the pig's biochemistry excretes only 2% of its total uric acid content, the remaining 98% remains as an integral part of the body.

Hey, really thanks for your explanation, Zafar!

No problem. This is my responsibility,
Tom.

We don't know that we don't have a neck.

Please forward to others.

It may answer some of their questions especially when a non-muslim ask.

To awaken and kindle enthusiasm is the sure way to teach easily and successfully.
