A male dentist with dark hair, wearing a white lab coat, a white surgical mask, and white gloves, is examining a female patient's teeth. The patient is reclined in a dental chair with a yellow headrest. The dentist is using a dental instrument to examine the patient's mouth. In the background, there is a dental unit with various tools and a model of human teeth on a counter. The scene is brightly lit, typical of a modern dental clinic.

In our progressive century are many types of dental clinics. There are private or group practice. But all of these dental clinics do one work – it is treating. Now we will see many types of dental clinics.

Private Practices.

Private practice is mean when doctor work alone, he opened business and work only for himself.

Hospital Dental Clinics.

A hospital dental clinic operates as a division of a hospital group. Its dentists work directly for the hospital. These dental clinics usually are on hospital grounds or in annexed buildings near the hospital.

Community health centers.

Community health centers frequently provide dental services in addition to general health care services. These types of clinics serve a particular community or population and combine the efforts of hospitals, the government and the health care industry to provide its community members with adequate health care services.

Group Practices.

These professionals work together, sharing space and using the same equipment. Although care might be less personal than private practice, the presence of more dentists allows the practice to treat more patients and pool resources to buy more equipment and hire more staff.
