The convenient New York Bay was first discovered by Europeans in 1524, when D. de Verrazano arrived here with his expedition. At that time these lands were inhabited by the Indian tribes of the Delaware. The next time this place was visited by Henry Hudson as part of the Dutch East-Indian campaign and as a result, in 1626 it was decided to establish a Dutch settlement here, calling it New Amsterdam.

In 1792, one of the most important events took place, which contributed to the future approval of the city as the financial center of the world - the opening of the New York Stock Exchange. Now it is the largest in terms of capitalization and plays a major role in the financial life not only of the United States, but of the entire globe.

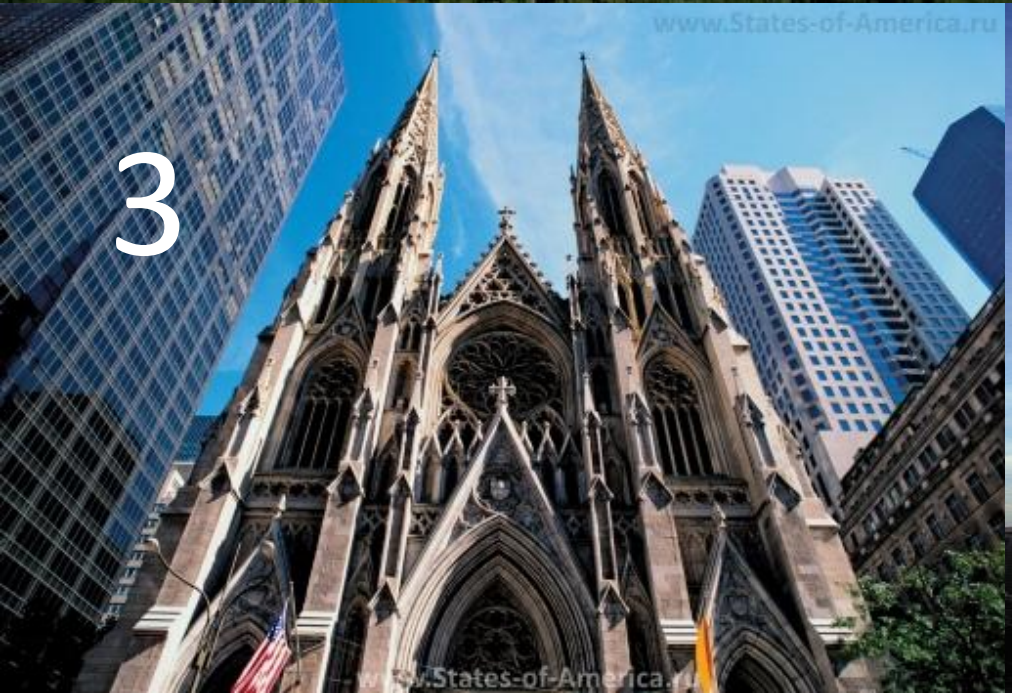

The USA nation and territory

New York is the largest city in the USA, as well as one of the largest in the world - its population is 8.3 million people, and the occupied area is 1214 km². It is located in the southeastern part of the state of the same name (therefore, the city itself is often called New York City to avoid confusion) on the shores of the Atlantic Ocean. The famous Hudson River flows through the city, the city also divides the East River, most of New York occupies the western tip of Long Island. The city was founded in the 17th century by the Dutch and until 1664 was called New Amsterdam.

USA climate

The climate of New York is usually humid continental, while the extreme southeastern part of the state lies in the warm humid subtropical climate zone. Winter temperatures are below average, while New York City is on the Atlantic coastline, including New York City.
