Kul-Sharif Mosque - the main cathedral mosque of the Republic of Tatarstan and the city of Kazan

The Kul-Sharif Mosque is the main cathedral mosque of the Republic of Tatarstan and the city of Kazan. It is located on the territory of the Kazan Kremlin. This is one of the main attractions of the city. The mosque on the territory of the Kazan Kremlin has not only religious significance, but was originally built as a center of enlightenment and a memorial to the defenders of the city - on the site of an old mosque, destroyed in 1552 during the capture of Kazan by the army of Ivan the Terrible. At that time, the defense of one of the parts of the city of Kazan was headed by Imam Kul Sharif, in whose honor a new mosque was named, he was killed along with his associates.

The decree on the reconstruction of the mosque at the historic site in the Kazan Kremlin was signed in 1995 by the President of Tatarstan M. Sh. Shaimiev.

Bulgar is an ancient city in modern Tatarstan

Great Bolgar is located on the left Bank of the Volga river 140 kilometers from Kazan, near the modern city of Bolgar. The area of the settlement is 550 hectares, and the length of its fortifications is more than five kilometers. Every year in the Great Bolgar are celebrations associated with the adoption of Islam by the Volga Bulgaria, during which thousands of Muslim pilgrims from Russia and abroad gather here. Every summer a bright and spectacular festival of medieval battle is organized. The religious Shrine and historical homeland of the Volga Tatars, known in the Muslim world as the "Northern Mecca", is located three hours' drive from Kazan. It is here that one of the tourist gems of the Republic of Tatarstan, the Bulgarian state historical and architectural Museum-reserve, which was included in the UNESCO world heritage list in 2014, is located.
