International value

- Previously, many countries had their own, local holidays, when people took to the streets and together they planted trees and flowers, there by decorate their cities and towns. There are instances when initiated actions in one country have gained international importance. It happened on the occasion of Earth Day. When celebrated simultaneously in many countries, it is generally accepted. Therefore, the international significance of this celebration acquired in 1970, when in one day more than 20 million people participated in organized worldwide environmental events. Despite this, in 1990 the day April 22 was declared as the international Earth day. Since it is officially celebrated in many countries.

Calling people to protect the environment

- April 22, 1970, Senator Nelson created a group of students who called on the population to environmental protection and preservation of a favorable climate on earth. In consequence the student procession has grown into a national movement, first in the USA and then spread around the world. Now the festival has international significance and is a reminder to day environmental catastrophes, that each person can contribute to the preservation of the environment on the planet and to be responsible for the condition of the environment around them. In 2009, the UN General Assembly adopted the decision to celebrate April 22 world earth Day. On this day, the entire population of the planet should remember that the Earth is our common home, which must be kept in order.

What will happen to the Earth?

Happy Earth day

The land should be protected,
Otherwise protected,
Mountains, rivers and fields —
It's our Land.
Life on it after each hour
So depends on all of us
That taking care of our her
Every day is even more important.
Congratulations on the Earth Day
Take care of our Land,
And it you back
Will protect from various troubles!
