Socio - economic, political and demographic consequences of migration policy

- Accelerate the process of penetration of capitalist relations in the economic life of the region. Formed commodity production;
- Appears private ownership of land, spread a sedentary life in the village;
- In the northern regions of Kazakhstan, where a crowded emigrant flow was directed, becomes dominant farming;
- Accelerate the social stratification of the Kazakh Shaura. Part Shaura who settled near the cities or Russian settlements, began to get involved in the market;
- Democrats commoners, exiled to Kazakhstan, have played a huge role in the study region, the formation of world scientists, educators of the masses of the Kazakh population

consequences of migration policy

Between locals and settlers occurred exchange of skills and abilities of farming in the steppe, desert and arid regions. At the same time the tsarist resettlement policy has led to a drastic restriction of the rights of indigenous peoples:

Kazakhs were removed and transferred to the use of displaced millions of dessiatines of the best land

- intensified the colonial policy of the tsarist
 - Limit the spread of Islam in the Kazakh steppes
- gradually, but the share of the non-indigenous population in the region has steadily increased
- The number of social conflicts increased significantly on an ethnic basis
