That's how it started out

- It was these quarantine measures and the "scary" news headlines in the media that provoked feelings of anxiety, hypochondriacal disorder and depression.

Asian Americans have been verbally and physically attacked, shunned during pandemic, study shows coronavirustoday_latimes Since #coronavirus shutdown began last March, thousands of Asian Americans have faced racist verbal and physical attacks or have been shunned by others, according to a study. The report by @stopaapihate documents 3,795 racially motivated attacks against Asian Americans from March to February, noting that the number is likely a fraction of the attacks that occurred, because many were not reported to the group. Read more about the study at the link in bio. 📰: @genaro4707

coronavirustoday_latimes

- About 68% of the attacks were verbal harassment, 21% were shunning and 11% were physical assaults

- Most of the incidents occurred at businesses or on public streets

- More than 2/3 of the attacks in the study were reported by women

- More than 40% of the attacks were reported by Chinese Americans, 15% by Korean Americans and 8% by Filipino Americans

Asian racism in the media

● Other comments

Racism

- The fact of the presence of racism in society with the emergence of a new coronavirus infection can be confirmed by many stories of people who have Encountered this problem.

Social Justice

- Racism is a dangerous trend that is gaining strength. Slogans, videos, and memes instantly gain popularity.

Public efforts

- There were public efforts against racism during the coronavirus in the countries.

For example, in Canada, where one of the largest Chinese diasporas, held a press conference and called for an end to the epidemic-the epidemic of racism.

New wave of hatred

- In the media, this incident is marked as a "new wave of hatred" and is associated with baseless claims that people belonging to the Asian race are responsible for the spread of Covid-19.

Unmeaning bullying

- After a while, the pandemic will disappear and the coronavirus will enter a number of diseases common to medicine and humanity, but will the resentment of people who have faced bullying pass? The answer to this question is: no.
