History of the profession

based on the current concept of what is classified as linguistics or Philology, we can divide the works of ancient specialists in this field into these two categories, but these figures can be equally successfully attributed to the specialists of both one and the second area. Preserved works on Philology, which is 2500 years old. Already at that time people studied earlier texts which have accumulated for the previous centuries. In the days of ancient Greece and Rome, the education of children included such a subject as literature, which indicates the allocation of philologists important place in the education system.

People with such a profession were partly historians, as in literature and language, you can read a lot of information about life and events in the past. From antiquity to the Renaissance Philology was studied most often by clergy or was simply closely related to religion. Under strong pressure of religion there were not only European, but also Arab representatives of this profession. And to this day,

Social significance of the profession in society

Social significance of the profession in society: Society would be illiterate and uneducated without philologists. After all, teachers at school and other educational institutions instill in us a love for literature, enriching our speech and worldview. In addition, people would not even be able to write correctly if they were not taught this by the teacher of the native language in school.

Mass character and uniqueness of the profession

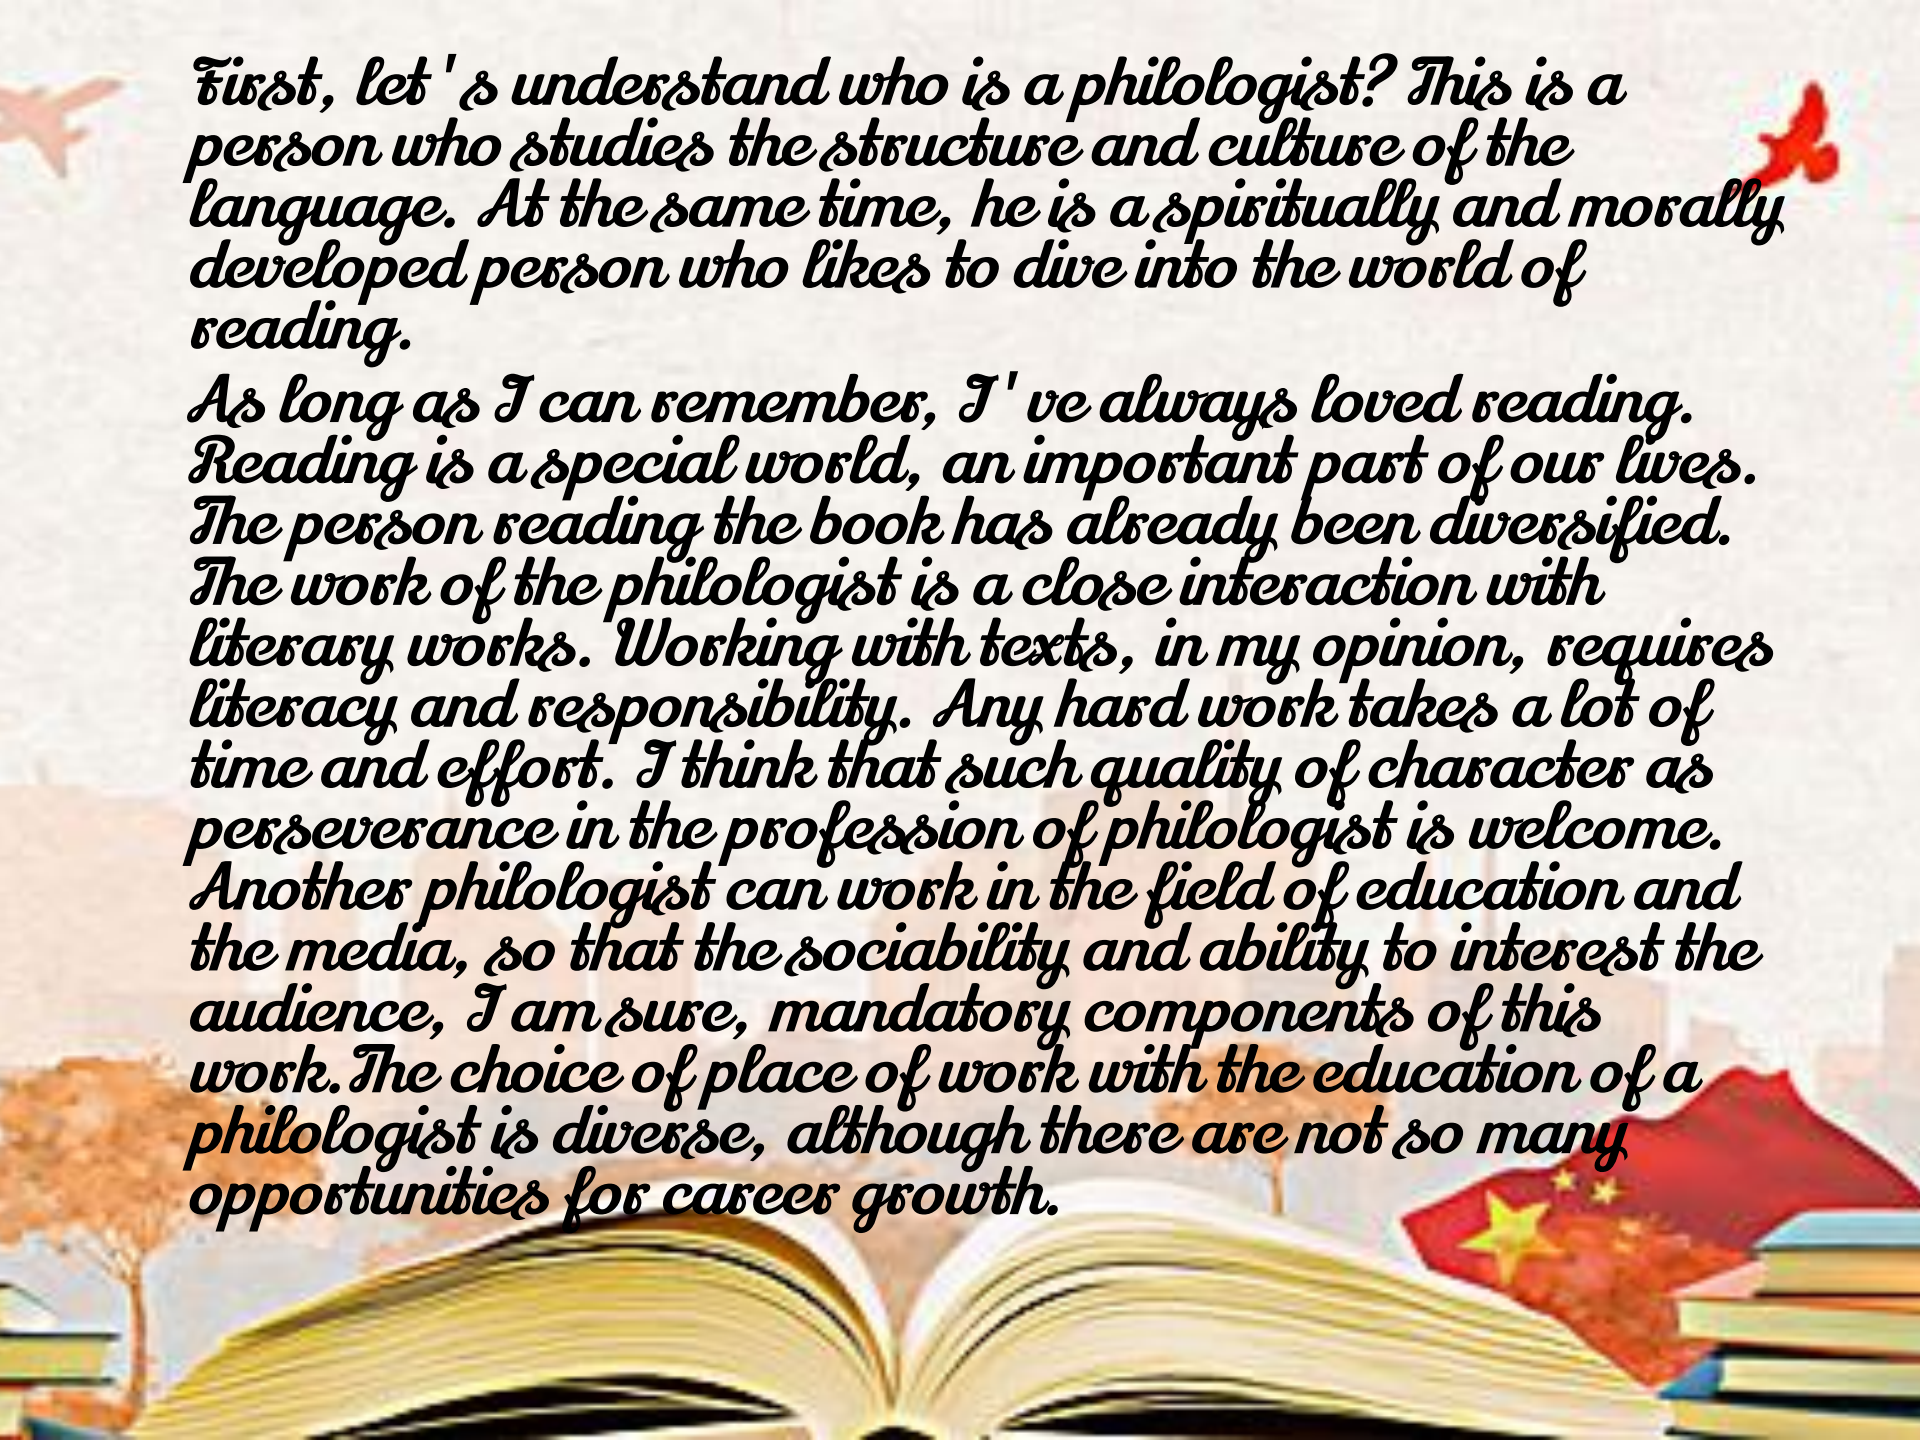

there is a place for such specialists in every district of the city and even in villages: schools, colleges, universities and museums. It often happens that the scholar is the teacher. But literary scholars work in some other organizations. People with such a profession should have a humanitarian mindset, a tendency to write essays and poems. A philologist should be polite as he points out or to talk to his students

why did I choose the profession of philologist?

First, let's understand who is a philologist? This is a person who studies the structure and culture of the language. At the same time, he is a spiritually and morally developed person who likes to dive into the world of reading.

As long as I can remember, I've always loved reading. Reading is a special world, an important part of our lives. The person reading the book has already been diversified. The work of the philologist is a close interaction with literary works. Working with texts, in my opinion, requires literacy and responsibility. Any hard work takes a lot of time and effort. I think that such quality of character as perseverance in the profession of philologist is welcome. Another philologist can work in the field of education and the media, so that the sociability and ability to interest the audience, I am sure, mandatory components of this work. The choice of place of work with the education of a philologist is diverse, although there are not so many opportunities for career growth.

I am certainly attracted to this profession by the opportunity to touch the unexplored mysteries of both Russian and related languages, to instill love for the word to the future generation, to prove myself, so it is a philologist I have to go through life and strive to ignite the fire of love for our language in the hearts of other people!

What can my profession give to the future?

The main reason for choosing Philology is that I write poetry and I want this feature to be the key to my future. I am in love with poetry, passion for poetry has led me to interests. In the future, I would like to study the poems of young poets and create a personal understanding of the poetry genre. The language of poetry is always an actual phenomenon. In the new sense, there are always words and concepts. That is why it is a genre that requires constant research. In the future, I want to see myself a full-fledged expert in this genre. As a first step in my profession, I am trying to succeed.

My achievements in my specialty
